It returns two members to House of Commons. The battle of Teaslesbury was fought in the "Bloody Meadow," immediately south of the town.

TEXAS, two townships, U. S., N. America. —I. New Jersey, on Rockaway Creek; 14 m. N.E. Flemington. Pop. 2,800. —II. Massachusetts, on Marimac and Concord rivers, 21 m. N.W. Boston, and on the railway thence to Lowell. P. 1,048.

TEXAS, one of the U. S., North America, formerly belonging to the Mexican Confederation, and independent from 1836 to 1846, when it was annexed to the United States, between lat. 26° and 36° 30' N., lon. 93° and 107° W., having E. the States Louisiana and Arkansas, N. the Indian territory and Nebraska, from which it is separated by the Red River; W. New Mexico, S. the Mexican departments Chihuahua, Coahuila, Nuevo Leon, and Tamaulipas, from all of which it is separated by the Rio Bravo del Norte, and S.E. the Gulf of Mexico. Estimated area 237,321 square miles, and population 212,692. Its N.W. regions are little explored, being inhabited only by roving Indians; elsewhere it possesses considerable natural advantages. Near the coast, for a variable distance inland, is a rich plain, whence the surface progressively rises into the mountain plateau of New Mexico. Principal rivers, the Sabine, Nueces, Trinidad, Brazos-de-Dios, Colorado, Guadalupe, San Antonio, and Nueces, all of which enter the Gulf of Mexico, or lagoons along its coasts. Cotton is the great staple; other products comprise maize, wheat, hemp, coffee and rice on the coast, indigo, tobacco, sugar, and the fruits common in South Europe. Grapes come to perfection, and some good wine is made. Oak, ash, elm, hickory, acacia, walnut, sycamore, and other timber is abundant, especially on the river banks; and in the S.W. the mountainous parts are covered with pine forests. Vanilla, sarsaparilla, and a great variety of medicinal and dyeing plants grow wild. A large proportion of the surface consists of rolling prairies, and rearing live stock is a principal occupation of the settlers. Mineral products comprise coal, iron, salt, nitre, limestone, and granite; the silver mines of the N.W. have been ruined by the Comanche Indians. In 1863, 84,903 bales of cotton were exported. Cattle and salt are exported to the West India Islands and to New Orleans, which city is a depot for a large portion of the trade of Texas. Hides, horns, tallow, wax, and other natural products compose the rest of the exports; the imports consist of lumber, furniture, manufactured goods generally, and some colonial produce. In 1851, the imports amounted to $4,715 tons. Texas is divided into 77 counties. Government vested in a senate and house of representatives, with a president elected for two years. Since 1846, it has sent 2 representatives to the United States Congress. Principal towns, Austin and Houston, which have been alternately the caps., Galveston (the principal port), and San Antonio de Bexar.

THAME or TAME, a river of England, co. Bucks and Oxford, after a S.W. course of 40 m. past Thame and Stadthampton, at Dorchester, joins the Isis, to which it afterwards gives the name of Thames. [TAME.]

THAMES (Tamensis), the principal though not the longest river of England, through the S. part of which it flows mostly in an E. direction. It rises under the name of the Isis about 2 m. S. Cirencester and 376 feet above the sea, flows at first S. to near Cricklade, then E.N.E. past Lechlade to near Oxford, and S.E. past Oxford, Abingdon, and Wallingford to Reading, after which its course is mostly E. to Gravesend. A few miles beyond this it expands into an estuary, which, at its junction with the North Sea, at the Nore, between the Isle of Sheppey and Foulness Point, is 15 m. across, and has on its opposite banks the towns Sheerness and Southend. Total course estimated at 216 m., area of basin 6,160 sq. m. At Dorchester it receives the Thame from the N., and thenceforth assumes its proper name; other principal affluents are the Churnet, Coln, Waintrush, Evenlode, Cherwell, Colne, Brent, Lea, and Rodong, from the N., and the Cole, Kennet (its chief aff.), Wey, Mole, and some smaller rivers, from the S. The Medway joins its estuary at Sheerness. Its basin is smaller than that of the Severn; but no river in the world has more commercial importance. The tide flows up it for about 80 m.; it is navigable for ships of any burden to Deptford, for vessels of 200 tons to London Bridge, and for barges 130 miles further, where it is united by the Thames and Severn Canal with the Severn, below Gloucester; it is also connected with all the centre of England by the Oxford and Warwick and Grand Junction Canals, and by other canals with Bristol, Basingstoke, Arundel, etc. Under the Romans it formed the N. boundary of the province Britannia Prima. During the Saxon heptarchy, it divided the kingdoms of Wessex, Sussex, and Kent, from those of Mercia and Essex; it now separates the cos. Oxford, Bucks, Middlesex, and Essex on the north, from those of Berks, Surrey, and Kent on the south.

THAMES, a river of Upper Canada, British N. America, London and Western districts, flows through a fertile country in the peninsula between Lakes Huron and Erie, and after a S.W. course of 160 m., enters Lake St. Clair. It is navigable for boats from its mouth to Chatham, besides which town, London and Oxford are on its banks.

THAMES, a river of the U. S., North America, Connecticut, formed by the confl. of the Shetucket and Santic at Norwich city, flows S., and enters Long Island Sound at New London, after a course of 14 miles, throughout which it is navigable for sloops and steamers.

THAMES OF WAH-RO, a river of New Zealand, N. island, after a N. ward course joins the sea by an estuary, 30 m. in breadth, termed the Firth of Thames (or Waika-houanga), and on the S.W. shore of which is the town Auckland.

Pieve-San-Stefano, and flows S.E.E. as far as Barberini, within 20 m. of Rome, where it turns S.W., and after a course of 185 m. enters the Mediterranean, 17 m. below Rome, by two mouths, which enclose a small delta, the ancient Isola Sacra. It is navigable at certain seasons as far as the confluence of the Nera, 80 m. N. Rome. Principal tributaries, the Topino, Nera (anc. Nar), and Teverone (anc. Anio), from the E.; the Nestore, Chiana, and Nepi, from the W. Its banks are not picturesque; and the stream, usually sluggish, is rapid in spring, and brings down with it a coloured muddy deposit, which caused it anciently to be termed the "yellow Tiber." At Rome it is about 300 feet broad.

TIBET or THIBET, an extensive region of Central Asia, included in the Chinese empire, stretching from lon. 78° to 104° E., and from the great chain of the Himalaya to an unascertained distance northward, having N. Chinese Turkistan, the desert Gobi, and the Ko-ko-nor territory, W. Ladakh, Leh, and the other countries of "Little Tibet," lately belonging to the Sikhs, R. China-Propier, and S. the territories of Burmah, British India, Bootan, Sikkim, Nepal, and the Panjab. Area 90,200 sq. m. Pop. 6,000,000. The W. part, which alone has been explored by Europeans, is a lofty table-land, with a very dry climate; the cold, although severe, is not so great as might have been predicated, and the lower limits of the snow line is higher on the N. than on the S. slope of the Himalaya, being estimated at 16,000 to 18,000 feet above the sea level. Near all the great rivers of South Asia rise in this country; the Indus, Satlej, Brahmaputra, Ganges and Jumna, originate around the region of lat

31° N., lon. 31° E. Numerous affluents of the Ganges flow through the Himalaya also, from W. Tibet. From E. Tibet, which seems to be a mass of mountains, flow the Irrawadi, Menam, and Menam-kong, and here also are some head streams of the Yang-tze kiang, or great river of China. In the west half are several lakes of considerable size. The land in W. Tibet, so far as has been discovered, is very bare of trees, or large vegetable products; yet it abounds with game, and other wild animals, and numerous flocks of sheep and goats, the hairy wool of which is used for the manufacture of shawls and other fine fabrics in Cashmere. Barley, pease, and wheat, are the chief crops raised; garden vegetables and fruits are in little variety, and the inhabitants live more by pastoral than agricultural pursuits. The yak (bos grunniens), and several other kinds of cattle, are reared; horses, mules, and sheep are used as beasts of burden. A fine race of dogs, and the musk deer, a small species, are natives of Tibet. Clay-slate, granite, quartz, and limestone, are chief constituents of the mountain ranges; borax in great quantity, nitre, rock-salt, lead, silver, copper, gold, turquoise, and lapis-lazuli, are among the mineral products; but the great scarcity of fuel forms a serious obstacle to mining and the reduction of metals. Manufactures of woollens, sacking, and other woven fabrics, are pretty general, and much cloth is sent from Lassa into China. The traffic through Tibet is extensive, and mostly monopolized by the government and officers of state. The trade with China is conducted at Lassa and Sin-ning, a town of the Chinese province Kan-su, where the Tibetan caravans exchange the native produce and Indian goods for tea, silver, bullion, brocade, fruits, tobacco, quicksilver, cinnamon, furs, porcelain, musical instruments, pearls, and corals. Nepal and Bootan derive all their Chinese goods through Tibet; and from the former and Bengal, English and Indian piece goods, sugar, tobacco, indigo, paper, rice, spices, sandal-wood, and gums, are received; from Assam, silk, iron, and stick lac; from Chinese Turkestan, horses and camels; from Ladakh, dried fruits, shawls, gamboge, saffron, copper, tobacco, and timber. The roads and bridges are far inferior to those of China. Tibet, which became subordinate to China in 1648, is politically divided into E., or Hither, and W., or Ulterior Tibet, each ruled by a minister from Pe-king, in conjunction with the ecclesiastical heads of the country, the Dalai-lama, at Lassa, the E. cap., and the Bantchen-erdeni, at Teshoo-Lombo, the W. capital. Tibet is the head quarters of Buddhism, which is here exhibited in its greatest purity. The country abounds with temples, and it is stated that 80,000 lamas or priests are supported at the expense of the government. Amongst the inhabitants there are believed to be about 8,000 Roman Catholics. The Chinese armed force consists of 60,000 men, of whom 50,000 are infantry. The population, like the other inhabitants of the table land of Central Asia, are of the Mongolian race. Besides Lassa and Teshoo-Lombo, the chief towns are Shigatze, Jira-Gounggar, Katan, etc., of which we know little except the names.

TIMOR, an island of the Malay Archipelago, between lat. 8° and 10° 30' S., lon. 123° 30' and 137° E., separated from N.W. Australia by the Timor Sea. Length 900 m., breadth 40 to 70 m. Estimated area 5,990 sq. m. It appears to be very populous. In the interior the inhabitants are mostly of the Papuan Negro race; on the coast, Malays, with an intermixture of Dutch and Portuguese settlers. It is traversed in its length by a mountain chain, partly covered with forests; in the interior are some fertile plains, where wheat and other products, not common in the Archipelago, are raised. Around the coasts every spot of ground, admitting of cultivation, appears to be occupied, and the country is covered with dwellings and plantations. Principal exports are sandal-wood sent to China, beeswax to Java, and cattle, horses, maize, and sago, to the Australian colonies, Mauritius, and Singapore, in return for muskets, gunpowder, hardware, calicoes, and other British manufactures, which constitute the chief imports, besides rice, arrack, and other native produce from Java and Macassar. British ships frequently visit Timor, chiefly homeward-bound whalers, as also Dutch ships and native vessels. Sago is the chief article of food; millet, maize, yams, sweet potatoes, and cotton, are raised; gold, copper, and rock salt are met with, but no mines are wrought. Pearls are fished off the S.W. extremity of the island. The Dutch possess the settlement of Coepang in the S.W., which is a free port. Dili, on the N.W. coast, is a settlement belonging to the Portuguese, and is surrounded by a very fertile territory, but unhealthy for Europeans. In these settlements the natives are said to be Christians; in the interior the great majority are idolaters.

TIMOR-LAUT, an island of the Malay Archipelago, between lat. 7° 10' and 8° 30' S., lon. 131° and 131° 40' E., 260 m. E. Timor. Length 90 m. Surface mountainous and wooded.

TRANSYLVANIA (Germ. Stebenburgen, "the Seven Towns"), the most E. prov. of the Austrian empire, with the title of Grand Principality, between lat. 45° 30' and 47° 40' N., lon. 23° 18' and 26° E., having W. and N. Hungary and the Bukovina, E. the Bukovina and Moldavia, S. Walachia, from which it is separated by the main range of the Carpathian mountains. Area 21,160 sq. m. Pop. (1858) 2,073,050. Surface mostly covered by ramifications of the Carpathians, and Mount Bimochich, near Kronstadt, is 8,700 feet in height. Principal rivers, the Tiszas in the N.; Maros, with its affluents the Kukeis, in the centre; and the Aluta in the S. The banks of these rivers are densely wooded, especially those of the Maros, and hence the province derived its name, signifying a forest region. These forests yield valuable timber. Soil very various. Climate on the mountains rude, but in the valleys as mild as that of N. Italy, and a surplus of corn over the home-consumption is raised. Chief crops, wheat, barley, oats, rye, buckwheat, maize, pulses, potatoes, fruits, tobacco, flax, hemp, saffron, and wine. The rearing of horses, sheep, and other live stock, is important. In the Backer country is a breed of hardy ponies, and the horses elsewhere have been much improved. Hurdles are used for field labour; the bear, wolf, and an abundance of game roam in the forests; in which also great numbers of swine are fed. The most remarkable mineral product is rock-salt, a bed of which extends from Walachia through Transylvania to Galicia, covering a space of 570 m. in length, and from 60 to 80 m. in breadth; 1,600,000 cwt. of salt are procured annually from mines; there are, besides, 120 salt springs. Gold, silver, iron, lead, copper, antimony, arsenic, mercury, alum, sulphur, nitre, gypsum, and marble, are amongst the chief mineral products. Twenty-two gold mines are wrought, and nearly every stream in the country is auriferous. The average produce of gold is 2,500 marks, of which 1,500 is obtained from washings. Silver yields annually 6,000 marks. It has manufactures of wool, silk, and cotton stuffs. Exports consist of salt, oil, oil, honey, tallow, wax, honey, tallow, mutton, and other products, in return for manufactured goods, worth fabrics, jewellery, hats, glassware, etc. The trade is mostly in the hands of Greeks and Armenians. The Miron and Szamos rivers serve as the chief routes for conveyance of goods. Roads are almost impassable; except in a few towns, inns are unknown. The peasantry generally, especially those of the Greek church, are oppressed and ignorant, except in Saxen-land in the S. This part of Transylvania derives its name from having been settled by colonists from Lower Saxony, in the 12th century, and is divided into the districts or szekes of Mediasch, Miihlensbach, Hermannstadt, Klausenburg, Scharnstein, Reussmarkt, and Broos or Szarvas (the "Seven Towns"), to which Kronstadt and Bistritz were subsequently added. The Szeklers occupy five szekes, or szekes in the E. part of the country, and the rest of the principality, comprising 8-6ths of the whole, and divided into 9 cos, and 2 districts, is termed the Magyar-land, from its predominant people. No country in the world has, within so small a compass, so great a variety in its population. These comprise 14 distinct races, of which the 8 principal are Hungarians, Szeklers, and Saxons; the others are Walachians, German colonists, Bulgarians, Armenians, Greeks, Russians, Poles, Jews, Gypsies, and Moravians. The different forms of religion, which are supported by the state, and enjoy equal privileges, were, in 1849, Roman Catholic and Juted-Greek, 368,136; Protestant, 200,885; and Unitarian, 81,211; Jews and professors of the Dissenting-Greek church are tolerated. The Roman Catholics have a lyceum at Klausenburg, and nine gymnasia; and the Protestants have four colleges, or large gymnasia, the chief of which is at Nagy-Enyed, and nine smaller gymnasia; the Unitarians, a college at Klausenburg, two gymnasia, and several schools. Transylvania lately sent members to the Hungarian diet, besides having a diet of its own. The country, in 1848 and 1849, was the seat of protracted warfare, during which it is estimated that 200 towns and villages were burned, and 10,000 of the population perished. Transylvania was annexed to the Austrian empire by Joseph II. in 1790. [HUNGARY.]

Garsel and the pash. Akhal-taik, Kara, Erzeroum, and Iivas. Surface mostly mtnous, and the coast-line clothed with dense forests, rises to from 4,000 to 5,000 feet above the sea. Many tracts are highly fertile and well cultivated; and it produces wheat, barley, and maize, with hemp, flax, tobacco, wool, honey, wax, fruits, charcoal, and timber, which, with some linen cloths, carpets, leather, soap, salted fish, wine, tar, and leeches, form the chief exports. Its E. part, called Lazistan, is destitute of towns, from being inhabited by Lazes, a rude people, numbering about 50,000. Principal towns, Trebizond, Kereban, Trebboli, Elisah, and Batum, all on its coast.—Trebizond (anc. Traperus), the cap., is an important fortified seaport city, on the S.E. coast of the Black Sea, 120 m. N.W. Erzeroum. Lat. 41° 1' N., lon. 39° 48' E. Estimated pop. from 20,000 to 80,000, the greater number of whom are Mohammedans, inhabiting the walled city. It stands on the slope of a hill facing the sea, enclosed by a castellated barrier, and further defended by a citadel on an adjacent height. Outside of the walls are deep ravines, filled with gardens and crossed by long bridges; besides several suburbs, in which are most of the Christian dwellings, with the principal bazars and khans. Houses mostly of one storey, built of stone and lime, roofed with red tiles, and so much interpersed with gardens and plantations that scarcely a house is visible from the sea. It has about 20 Greek churches, and nearly all its mosques have been formerly Christian places of worship; that of St Sophia, about 1 m. distant, is a handsome edifice. Trebizond has a fort on either side of a peninsula projecting into the Black Sea. From its position, the city is the natural entrepot of the trade of Armenia, N. Persia, and Georgia, with Mesopotamia, and owing to the establishment of steam navigation on the Black Sea, and between Trebizond and Constantinople, its trade has lately received a remarkable extension. Its exports consist chiefly of silk, wool, tobacco, wax, galls, oil, opium, and other drugs; honey, butter, timber for ship-building, the produce of Asia-Minor, and silk fabrics; Cashmere shawls, carpets, saffron, cotton, and camel-skins from Persia. Exports (1846) estimated at 479,874*l.*, of which silk stood for 210,080*l.* Imports estimated at 1,856,186*l.*, consisting of cotton goods, cotton colonial produce, spices, and iron from Great Britain; hardwares and glass from Germany; wines from France; corn from Russia; fire-arms, tin, salt, 8-4ths of all which are destined for Persia. In 1846, 181 ships, aggregate burden 41,678 tons, entered the port. At this city Xenophon and the Ten Thousand Greeks reached the sea in their memorable retreat. From 1903, until the subversion of the Eastern Empire, Trebizond was the cap. of an independent dominion, extending from the Phasis to the Italy.

Mean temperature of year 65°-2, winter 38°-4, summer 71°-4, Fahr. It consists of an old town built on the declivity of a steep hill, enclosed by old walls; and the new town, or Theresienstadt, Josephstadt, and the Franzensvorstadt, bordering the sea on a plain at its base. The new town is well built. Between the old and new town winds the Corso, a spacious thoroughfare, opening successively into several squares, in the principal of which are a public fountain, and the column and statue of the Emperor Charles VI. Principal edifices are the exchange, the cathedral in the old town, several other Roman Catholic, and two Greek churches, two Protestant churches, a Jews' synagogue, an English chapel, an hospital, several theatres, governor's palace, barracks, post-house, dockyard, lazaretto, custom-house, and terrace of the casino, ornamented by statues. The harbour, formed by the Theresian mole, is small, but secure and convenient; it is bordered by a wide stone quay, close to which vessels of 300 tons' burden can anchor, and on its N. side is a quarantine dock, surrounded with hotels, and every other convenience. The city is partially intersected by the Maria Theresa Canal, by means of which vessels can load and unload at the doors of the warehouses. Trieste is a free port, and is the great emporium for the trade of the Austrian Empire by the Adriatic. Principal exports are corn, rice, wine, oil, alumina, tobacco, wax, hemp, wool, skins, furs, metals, timber, and other produce. Value (1853) estimated at 1,800,000*l*. Imports, same year, estimated at 4,000,000*l*. It is a depot for warehousing goods from the Black Sea, Turkey, and Egypt, and has a large mercantile navy. It is a bishop's see, the seat of an imperial academy, a school of navigation, many other schools, and learned associations, and it has many banking establishments, insurance offices, newspapers, and manufactures of liquors, wax-light, leather, soap, and musical instruments; dyeing houses, sugar refineries, potteries, and distilleries. Trieste is the residence of consuls of most commercial nations. It was of importance under the Romans, and has the remains of an amphitheatre and some arches. In the middle ages it was the cap. of an independent republic. The French took it in 1797 and 1805. The gov. of Trieste, forming the S. and W. parts of Illyria, comprises the peninsula of Istria, the islands Veglia, Cherso, Lussin, etc., in the Adriatic and the valley of the Isonzo; it is divided into the circs. Trieste, Istria, and Gorizia. Area 2,900 sq. m. Pop. (1853) 324,906. TAVIR, the most E. of the British West India Islands, windward group, immediately off the coast of South America, 12 m. E. of the peninsula of Paria Venezuela, and bounding the Gulf of Paria on the E. Lat. of Port Cabello 10° 50' N., lon. 60° 54' W. Shape oblong, with promontories extending from three of its corners. Length 36 m., breadth 60 m. Area estimated at 2,090 sq. m. Pop. 60,319. Its mountain chains run W. to E., continuous with those of the mainland, those along the N. coast rising to 3,000 feet in elevation, and the central range flanked on either side by the extensive valleys of the Caron and Orotoire. On the W. coast are numerous bays; but the N. and E. shores are destitute of harbour. Soil extremely fertile; and the elevated part of the surface are mostly covered with dense forests. The island is not subject to drought, and is apparently less unhealthy than many other West India islands. Cacao forms the chief crop; other products are sugar, coffee, cotton and asphalt from the asphaltum or pitch lake situated on a peninsula N.E. of Greazo Bay. There are several active mud volcanoes, which throw mud to a height of 30 feet, and occasionally emit flames. Exports consist of cacao sugar, molasses, coffee, cotton, and hides. Government vested in a governor, a colonial council of 12 members, and the orders of the sovereign by jury are established. The island is divided into 11 dists.; chief town Port of Spain, on the W. coast. The island was discovered by Columbus in 1498. It successively belonged to the Spaniards and the French, and capitulated to the British under Abercrombie in 1797.

TAVIR, a beylik of the Ottoman Empire, the most E. of the Barbary states, N. Africa, its dom. comprising Barca, Fezzan, and the region extending from the island Jerba to the S. extremity of the Gulf of Sert (anc. Syrta Major), between lat. 26° and 33° 30' N., lon. 10° 30' and 25° E., having E. Barca, W. Tunis, and S. Fezzan and the Libyan Desert. Estimated area of Tripoli Proper (including Barca), 160,000 sq. m., and pop. 300,000; but the whole dominion is supposed to have an area of upwards of 300,000 sq. m., and a port of them, 1,500,000 to 2,000,000. The coast has few harbours, but a few miles inland, beyond which the whole country is little better than a sandy waste, the rivers of Tripoli being more numerous. Products of the coast are corn and fruits, in great variety; cotton, silk, tobacco, saffron, madder, and castor-oil; in the interior, sesame, dates, and galls are the chief sources of wealth, and the casah and lotus are indigenous. The surplus produce of the date and olive plantations, with straw mats, earthen jars, and other domestic manufactures, are partly exported by sea and partly disposed of to Bedouin traders. Wine of superior quality might be produced. Cattle, sheep, and poultry are sent to Malta. Rock-salt is an important article of export. Principal manufactures are carpets, cloaks, and other articles of clothing; casnets, goats' hair, sacking, prepared skins, morocco leather, earthenware, and potash. Foreign commerce is mostly with Malta, Tunis, and the Levant; and the chief trade is in the barter of European goods for those of Central Africa, whence several caravans arrive annually with slaves, gold dust, ivory, sesame, and cotton. Tripoli is stated to be the most civilized of the Barbary states. State religion Mohammedanism. Government, since 1865, exercised by a pasha, a vassal of the Porte.

TRIPOLI, anc. Ena, a fortified maritime city of N. Africa, cap. state, on a low rocky promontory extending into the Mediterranean. Lat. (of castle) 32° 53' 9" N., lon. 13° 11' E. Pop. estimated at 15,500; viz. 12,000 of Turkish descent, 1,500 Christians, and 2,000 Jews. It is said to be clean and well regulated. Principal edifices, the citadel, with the residence of the pasha, and a dockyard, some mosques, several Jews' synagogues, churches, market places, and European hotels. It has a triumphal arch, erected in 166, in honour of Aurelius Antoninus and Verus, besides other remains of antiquity. Its port, though small, is secure, and can accommodate vessels drawing 18 feet water.—Tripoli Vecchia or Old Tripoli, is a small maritime town, 45 m. W. ward.

TRIPOLI or TAMBLUX, Tripolia, a seaport town of Syria, cap. pash., on the Mediterranean, at the base of a spur of Mount Lebanon, and at the mouth of the Kaduba, 46 m. N.E. Beyrout. Lat. 34° 26' 4" N., lon. 35° 48' E. Pop. 12,000. (P) It is surrounded by fine gardens, but the marshy character of its vicinity renders it unhealthy. Houses chiefly of stone, and the town has many remains of middle-age architecture; in and around it are numerous granite columns and traces of antiquity, and an old castle stands on an adjacent height. Tripoli doubtless owed its name to its consisting of three distinct towns, while the Marina or M. Mina, the principal seat of trade, is a separate quarter S.W. ward, on a projecting point of land bordering the port. The harbour is small, shallow, and frequently unsafe, but it retains some export trade in silk, wool, cotton, tobacco, galls, cochineal, and soap. Tripoli is a Greek bishop's see, and the residence of several European consuls. It was taken by the Crusaders in 1108, at which time a large and valuable library was consigned to the flames.—II. a ruined city of Asia Minor, Antiochia, near the Mandera, 56 m. S.E. TURKEY (properly the Ottoman Empire), a vast country occupying the S E part of Europe and the W of Asia, and comprising, at least nominally, the Hedjaz in Arabia, Egypt, Nubia, and the brylls of Tripoli and Tunis in Africa; cap Constantinople The administrative divisions of Turkey are ill defined, and subject to frequent changes [see table of divisions at end of Turkey]

TURKEY IN EUROPE, between lat 39° and 48° 20' N, lon 15° 40' and 29° 30' E, is bounded E by the Black sea, S by Greece, the Archipelago, and the Sea of Marmora, W by Austria, the Adriatic, and the Ionian Sea, and N by Austria and Russia Pop (1855) 10,500,000 Surface is an undulating region of hills and valleys, mountains and table-lands, of little elevation; but it is traversed in the centre from E to W by an extensive mountain chain [BALKAN] The other principal mountains are the Despot Dagh or Rhodope in the S, Pindus in the E.W., the Dinaric Alps in the Danube, and the Carpathians in the N. Turkey is watered by numerous rivers, the chief of which are the Danube, and its affluents the Drina, Morava, Auts, Sava, and Pruth, in the basin of the Black Sea; the Maritsa, Strymon, Vardar, in the basin of the Archipelago in the S.; and the Veyanos, Drin, and Narenta, in the basin of the Adriatic, in the W. Largest lakes are those of Ochrida and Scutari in the W. The climate is more severe than might be supposed from the geographical position of the country; in the recesses of the highest mountains snow lies during the greater part of the year. It is excessively cold in winter during N.E. winds, which are then prevalent, and in the plains of Walachia and Moldavia the sledge is used as in Russia. A great portion of Albania, protected by elevated mountains from the N.E. winds, enjoys a delicious climate; but this region is liable to be visited by destructive earthquakes. In the rocky districts of the interior, and in the maritime valleys of Albania, the summer is insupportably hot. Destructive storms are frequent in the S. A great portion of Turkey is covered with forests; the best oak grows in Servia and Lower Bosnia; the largest forests of fir and pine occur in Bosnia and Upper Croatia. The olive thrives in the maritime plains of Albania, where also the orange and citron are cultivated. The vine grows in S. Turkey, Herzegovina, and Servia, at an elevation of from 1,000 to 2,000 feet. Maize is cultivated in the S.; rice, cotton, rye, and barley in Central Turkey, at an elevation of 2,000 to 3,000 feet. Agricultural operations are conducted in the roughest manner, and only a small portion of the country is cultivated. The principal wild animals are the brown bear in the wooded mountains between Albania and Macedonia, Bosnia, and the Lower Roderos, but seldom in the Balkan; the wolf is common; the wild boar, chamois, and stag, in the forests; the hare is abundant in Walachia; these are mostly hunted for their skins. Domestic animals comprise the dog, cat, and swine; sheep form the principal riches of the Walachian provs., whence an immense quantity of wool is exported. Goats are abundant in Turkey. Cattle are extensively reared in Walachia, Servia, and Bosnia, and the buffalo is common in Walachia, Bulgaria, and Thrace. The horse of Turkey is small but active; the ass and mule are chiefly employed in Thrace. Trout, etc., are plentiful in the rivers; and leeches, which abound in the marshes, are important articles of export. Turkey has mines of iron, lead, salt, and marble, but none of them are worked to advantage. Manufacts. are almost entirely domestic; the chief comprise saddles, copper and tin utensils, fire-arms, swords, coarse woollen cloths, linen and cotton spinning. Silks are manufactured chiefly at Salonika, Seres, and Larissa. Shawls are made only in the Asiatic provs., especially at Damascus. Carpets wrought by hand in the style of the Gobelins tapestry are manufactured in Bulgaria, and in Servia. There are cotton printing works in different localities; and dyeing, especially of bright red colours, in Bulgaria and the S. provs. Tanneries are numerous; embroidery is carried on by the females in the S. provs. Distilleries of brandy from prunes are common throughout all the country. Printing is carried on only at Bucharest, Belgrade, Constantinople, Colonna, and Montenegro; sugar work is made in the large towns, and there are gunpowder-mills near Constantinople. Commerce is almost entirely in the hands of Greeks, Armenians, and Jews. [AMMAN, ANTALIA, BUDAPEST, BULGARIA, CONSTANTINOPLE.]

Asia, between lat. 36° and 40° N. and lon. 26° to 45° E.; bounded N. by Persia, S. by the Persian Gulf and Arabia, W. by the Mediterranean, N. by the Sea of Marmora and the Black Sea, and N.E. by Russia, and comprises, in the Archipelago, the islands Mitylene, Scio, Samos, Nicaria, Patmos, Cos, Rhodes, and Scarpanto, and Cyprus. Pop. estim. (1861) at 18,000,000. The principal lakes are Van and the Dead Sea; and the chief rivers the Euphrates, Tigris, and their affluents, which flow S. to the Persian Gulf; the Kisil-Irmak, Keshil-Irmak, which flow N. to the Black Sea; the Sarabab and Meander to the Archipelago; the Sihun, Jihoon, Asany to the Mediterranean; and the Jordan to the Dead Sea. The chief mountains are the ranges of Taurus, Anti-Taurus, and Lebanon. The soil and climate present many varieties; in the S. are vast arid plains, but on the river banks and in the valleys of Lebanon the soil is extremely fertile. The summits of Taurus are clad with snow, and their flanks are covered with the vegetation of cold and temperate countries, while the valleys have a temperature almost tropical, and produce the fruits of S. Asia. The climate of Anatolia is temperate, and the soil is capable of producing all kinds of grain and fruit. The mountains contain all the useful metals. The chief products are oil, dye stuffs, medicinal plants, gums, wax, dried fruits, gall nuts, cotton, silk, wool, goats' hair, leeches, and sponges. The general features of the country are described under ASIA MINOR, and particulars under the heads ADANA, ANATOLIA, ARMENIA, BAGDAD, CARAMANIA, DAMASCUS, ERZERUM, KURDISTAN, MESOPOTAMIA, PALESTINE, SYRIA, and TRIPOLITANIA. The Turks, originally from Turkestan, founded, at different times, several empires in Asia. At the end of the 13th century, Osman or Othman, one of their emirs or princes, established the present empire in Asia-Minor. The Turks invaded Europe at the end of the 14th century, and conquered successively their present provinces; they took Constantinople in 1453. In the 16th century their dominion extended in Europe over the whole of Greece, part of Hungary, the Crimea, and the shores of the Black Sea; and the whole of the countries now forming Turkey in Asia, the Hedjaz, Egypt, and the regencies of Tripoli, Tunis, and Algiers, were subjugated by them. But since the 17th century, their power has greatly declined. Austria has expelled them from Hungary; Russia has deprived them of the provs. between the mouths of the Danube and the Caucasus in Europe, and those forming W. Transcaucasia in Asia; the Greeks have formed an independent state; Algiers has been wrested by the French; Moldavia, Walachia, and Servia, are under the influence of Russia, and only nominally subject to the Porte, whose power has nearly vanished from many of the provs. of Asia-Minor, Arabia, and Egypt. In 1833, the army of the Ottoman empire amounted to 178,000 men, reserve 135,000, the armies of Moldavia and Walachia 61,007; total 365,617 men. Navy comprised 6 ships of the line, 10 frigates, 6 corvettes, 14 brigs, 16 cutters and submerses, 6 steam-frigates, and 12 other small vessels. Total 70 vessels, manned by 84,000 sailors and 4,000 marines. Many of these ships have since been destroyed at Sinope, and others foundered in storms in the Black Sea. Public revenue in 1854, 105,110,000 francs; expenditure 174,450,000 francs. The provs. Moldavia and Walachia were invaded by a Russian army in 1856. In September the Porte declared war against Russia. The Turks, who call themselves Osmanlis, from Osman, number about one-third of the pop. in European and Asiatic Turkey; the remainder is composed of Tartars, Moravians, Wallachians, Servians, Bulgarians, Morlaks, Montenegrins, Albanians, Jews, Bohemians or Gipsies, Armenians, Georgians, Franks or Christians, Turcomans, Kurds, Arabians, and independent nomadic tribes in Asia. Mohammedanism is dominant in the empire, but a great portion of the pop. are Christians, who, indeed, far outnumber the Mohammedans in European Turkey. The emperor, who is styled sultan or grand signor, is regarded as absolute sovereign of the state, and Supreme Pontiff. The provinces are placed under pashas, whose authority is exercised with great despoticism, and is frequently most oppressive. Several towns and small communities form a species of republics in the middle of this despotism. The following are the provinces with the pop. and religious distinctions in 1844:—

* Ceded to Tuscany 9th October 1867.

The chain of the Apennines covers the N. and N.E. portion of the grand duchy; the highest point, Monte Falterona, in which the Arno has its origin, is 5,857 feet above the sea; the rest of the territory is agreeably diversified by hills and valleys. The principal rivers are the Arno, Ombrone, and Serchio, the former receiving nearly all the streams from the S. slope of the Apennines, and both flowing to the Mediterranean. The Tiber rises in the E. of Tuscany. The canal of Chiana unites the river Chiana with the Arno. Tuscany has no lakes of any extent, but numerous pools and extensive marshes. The climate is mild and salubrious, except in the Maritime, a marshy dist., extending along the S. coast, and covering nearly 1-6th part of the superficies of the state, the malaria from which produces pestilential fevers, on which account it is nearly deserted. Tuscany is celebrated for its mineral riches, and for the number of its mineral and thermal springs. Iron is most abundant in the island of Elba; copper, argentiferous lead, sulphur, mercury, alum, coal, statuary marble, and alabaster, in different parts of the grand duchy; and borax is supplied in abundance from the singular borax lagoons of Volterra. From its fertility, the valley of the Arno is called the garden of Italy, but agriculture is so imperfectly conducted, that the corn raised is insufficient for home consumption, and obtains from the chief food of the mountaineers. The chief crops are maize, wheat, rye, and barley. The culture of oil is prosecuted with great care, and that called Florence oil is celebrated. Wine is generally of inferior quality; that of Montepuciano is the best. Mules and sheep are of superior breeds, and herds of cattle are pastured in the drained portions of the Maremma. The principal manufactures are silks, in which Tuscany maintains its celebrity; woollens, which at one time employed 30,000 persons in Florence alone, but which are now confined to coarse cloths; paper of excellent quality is extensively manufactured. The making of straw-hats has greatly declined, although still important, especially in the vicinity of the capital, where great numbers of the peasantry are employed in preparing the straw. The other branches of industry comprise the manuf. of glass and crystal, articles in marble, alabaster, iron, brass, porcelain, coral, wax, carpet making, and typography. The export of manufactured goods forms a chief branch of the trade of Leghorn, whence 40 or 50 barges, with 10 or 12 men each, are annually sent to the coral fishery. The mercantile marine comprised, in 1854, 922 ships of all sizes, with a total of 50,178 tons, of which 17,156 belonged to Elba. Chief exports, olive oil, hides, straw-hats, borax, rape, wool, hemp, potash, coral, marble, tallow, cork, building timber, and paper. Imports British manufactures, grain, colonial goods, French, Swiss, and German manufactures, and salt fish. In 1856, 150 miles of railway were open. Government was formerly an absolute monarchy, but a representative constitution was obtained in 1848. Public instruction is widely diffused. Pisa, Sienna, and Florence are the seats of universities. Armed force in 1854 (both land and sea) 15,189 men. Public revenue (1854) 85,307,400 lire, expenditure 37,037,500 lire. [ELBA—ETRURIA.]

(1854) 925,466, mostly of German, but in the S. of Italian, descent. It is traversed from W. to E. by the Rhaetian Alps, which separate the valley of the Inn in the N. from the valleys of the Drave and Adige in the S.; Mount Orler, on the W., rises to 12,822 feet, and the Gross Glockner, on the E., to 12,425 feet in elevation. Besides the Inn, Drave, and Adige, with their affluents, the N.W. part, Voirariberg, is watered by the Ill and Bregen, flowing into the Lake of Constance, which forms the N.W. boundary. Small lakes are numerous, and the N. part of the Lake of Garda is in the Tyrol. Climate severe in the uplands; mean temperature of year at Innsbruck 48° F., and at Botzen 55° F.; the narrow valleys of the S., however, have a warm climate, similar to that of the adjacent part of Lombardy. Some maize, wheat, and pulse, are grown in the lower valleys, and buck-wheat, rye, and oats, on the mountain sides; but the corn raised is not sufficient for home consumption, and the chief wealth of the rural population is in their cattle and other live-stock. Wine and silk are the products of the southern provinces. The rearing of canary birds is pursued on a large scale in the valley of the Inn, and most parts of Europe are supplied with singing birds from the Tyrol. The wolf, bear, wild boar, marmot, and chamois, inhabit the mountain districts. Mining industry is important—coal, iron, and salt, are the principal minerals obtained; copper, gold, silver, lead and cobalt, are met with, but few metallic mines, except iron, are wrought; there are numerous mineral springs. Silks are manufactured in the S.; iron goods, cottons, linens, leather, and wooden articles, are executed with much ingenuity at Innsbruck, etc.; in the Inn valley, glass and paper are the other principal manufactured products. Principal exports are cattle, cheese, silk, iron and iron wares, salt, wine, timber, tobacco, and silk goods; corn and various manufactured goods. The transit trade between Germany and Italy is amongst the most important, occupying many of the pop.; the principal passes for traffic are the Brenner and Stelvio, across the main chain of the Alps, and the routes by Trient and the Pusterthal in the S. Many of the inhabitants emigrate annually as labourers into the neighbouring countries. Nearly all are Roman Catholics, under 10 bishops, suffragans of the archbishop of Salzburg. The Tyrol has its own national diet, composed of the nobility, clergy, deputies of the towns and of the rural districts, who meet in one chamber. It is divided into the 7 circles of Rovereto, Trient, Stsch, Pusterthal and Ensch, Lower Inn and Wipptal, Upper Inn and Vinschgau, and Voirariberg, also named from their chief towns; cap. Innsbruck. The Tyrol passed into the possession of the house of Hapsburg in the 13th century, and its inhabitants are amongst the most attached to the imperial rule in the Austrian empire.

Total for population (1850), 20,777,561. Slaves, 2,170,000. In 1850 the population of the United States was 2,322,793, in 1850 it was 2,322,793, in 1850 it was 2,322,793. The three original states of the Union distinguished thus by names of the holding states preceded by a star.

The United States Territories, in their northern boundary, commence on the S. side of that elevated water-shed which extends in a waving line from lat. 50 to 55° N., on the western side of the continent, to lat. 45° on the eastern side, and which divides the rivers that flow N. to the Arctic Ocean from those that flow S. into the Atlantic and Pacific. The chain of the Rocky Mountains, having an elevation of from 12,000 to 16,000 feet, runs along the whole western part, and the Alleghany or Appalachian Mountains, rising in some places to 4,000 feet elevation, extend along a considerable portion of the eastern or Atlantic side. Between these two chains lie the basins of the Mississippi, and its great tributaries the Missouri, Ohio, and Arkansas; so that the main portion of the United States may be characterized as one vast undulating valley. The region around and to the N. of the great chain of lakes is of granitic formation, as also the eastern portion of the Alleghany range. The Rocky Mountain region is chiefly granitic, with volcanic mountains interspersed. Silurian strata occupy a considerable portion of the northern and central part of the valley, while above these lie limestone, old red sandstone, and coal. An extensive coal bed forms the centre of the state Michigan. Coal also lies on the W. flanks of the Alleghanias, and a continuous field of this mineral extends through Pennsylvania, Ohio, and Kentucky, to Alabama, in lat. 33° N. Another extensive coal-field extends from Illinois to Kentucky. The seaboard extending from Cape Cod S.E. along the shores of the Atlantic and the Gulf of Mexico, including Delaware, parts of Carolina, Florida, Alabama, Louisiana, and Texas, is entirely of alluvium and tertiary formation. There are no large lakes S. of Michigan and Erie, but the country is everywhere intersected by extensive navigable rivers, and their numerous affluents. The Chesapeake, Delaware, Massachusetts, and Penobscot, are the principal bays. Principal harbours are—Portsmouth, Portland, Boston, New York, Baltimore, Charleston, and New Orleans. In 1833 the main shore line of the United States (excluding bays, sounds, islands, etc.) was ascertained to be 12,009 statute miles in extent. If the bays, sounds, islands, etc., be included, and the rivers entered to the head of tide water, the shore line will measure 33,003 miles. The water-slopes of the United States are as follow:—Pacific slope 766,002 sq. miles; Atlantic, Lake and Gulf slope E. and W. of the Mississippi, 962,602 sq. m.; Mississippi valley, drained by the Mississippi and its tributaries, 1,217,502 sq. m. The climate of the N.E. states is variable, with extremes of summer-heat and winter-cold. [New York, etc.] The southern states partake more of a tropical climate. [New Orleans.] The coasts of the Pacific are milder, and in the N. more moist, than those of the Atlantic. Mean annual fall of rain, New York, 36 inches; Charleston, South Carolina, 47 inches; Marietta, Ohio, 34 inches. N. of lat. 43° the birch, pine, American elm, willow, maple, and the plants of N. Europe, are chief forest products; between lat. 44° and 35° N., especially in the uplands, the oak, beech, sycamore, acacia, poplar, walnut, sassafras, and cedar, are predominant trees, and in the lowlands of this region the cypress and other products of S. Europe. S. of lat. 35° the magnolia, the vine, orange, sugar-cane, cotton, wheat, and maize flourish, and the vegetation has a tropical character. In the N. states farms and properties are mostly small, and cultivated by the proprietors; in the S. and W. are many large properties. Price of land extremely variable; near Philadelphia, the best cleared land fetches from 100 to 120 dollars per acre; in parts of New York, 25 dollars is an average price; the prairie lands in the W. states (Michigan, Illinois, etc.), are sold by the government at an upset price of 1 dollar per acre. Wheat and maize are raised in every part of the Union, the largest quantity of the first being produced in the states of Ohio, New York, Pennsylvania, and Virginia. Oats, rye, buckwheat, and rice, are the other principal grains; rice is grown in the greatest quantity in South Carolina. The sugar-cane is raised as far N. as lat. 35° on the eastern side of the continent. A sugar procured from the juice of the maple tree supplies its place in the most N. states. Cotton is confined to the S. states; the average annual amount is estimated at 750,000,000 lbs. The tobacco annually raised in the Union is about 2,000,000 cwts., the principal portion of which is raised in Virginia, Kentucky, Tennessee, Maryland, and North Carolina. Hay, hops, potatoes, wax, silk, hemp, flax, olives, madder, and indigo, are the chief remaining crops. The domestic animals of America have all been introduced from Europe. It has been estimated that there are in the Union 25,000,000 sheep, 1-5th being in the state of New York, which has also the largest proportion of cattle, and most other live stock; swine are, however, most plentiful in the middle states, and Cincinnati (Ohio) is the greatest mart for pork. Vast herds of bison wander over the wide prairies of the W.; the American elk, antelope, cougar, Virginia deer, bears, foxes, racoons, opossums, and many large birds of prey, and serpents, are amongst the wild animals. Gold is found in great abundance in California, which also yields iron, lead, copper, and silver. Mercury is found in Kentucky, Ohio, and on the borders of the great lakes, and copper, especially in the vicinity of Lake Superior. Coal is now extensively raised in many parts W. the Alleghany Mountains, particularly in Pennsylvania, which has accordingly become the great seat of railway enterprise. Illinois and Wisconsin possess very rich lead mines. The salt springs in New York yield salt annually to upwards of 5,600,000 dollars in value; the lead raised amounts to nearly 13,950 tons annually, of which about half is produced in the Wisconsin territory, and the rest chiefly in Illinois and Missouri. Mining employs a great many persons. Yield of cotton crop in 1854, 2,930,627 lbs. Sugar crop in 1851, 368,406,575 lbs. The cod and whale fisheries are extensively pursued; and, in 1849, 800 vessels were employed in the South Sea fisheries. The states are to a great extent supplied with British and other European manufactures; but of late years extensive home manufactures have been in operation, especially cotton, woollen, leather, metallic wares, and other goods, chiefly in the eastern states. In 1848 produce of all kinds to the value of 132,000,000 dollars were exported. Total imports for same year 154,000,000 dollars. Of late years a considerable quantity of grain and agricultural produce has been exported to Europe. The internal communication is facilitated by numerous canals and railways. In 1850 there were 4,000 miles of canals in operation; and, in 1858, 17,491 miles of railway. Telegraphic communication, and postage at a cheap rate, extend throughout all the more densely peopled states.

The government of the United States is that of a confederated republic. Each state has its separate and independent legislative, judiciary, and executive government, consisting of an assembly, senate, governor, judges, etc., who have unlimited powers in all local matters, and in everything except what is conceded to, and concerns, the general republic. The federal government consists of a president, chosen for 4 years, by special electors from each state, who is commander-in-chief of the army and navy, and who, with advice and consent of the senate, levies war or makes peace, appoints judges, and other government officers. The senate consists of two members chosen from each state, for a term of six years: the number, in 1850, was 60 members; over this body the vice-president presides. The house of representatives consists of one member for every 70,680 inhabitants, omitting 3-5ths of the slaves. The representatives are elected for two years, and

In 1890, according to the census, their powers and functions are vested in three of the members of the highest branch of Congress. They receive an allowance of eight dollars per day during the sitting of Congress. The cabinet consists of a secretary of state, and of the treasury, a secretary of war, and of the navy, an attorney-general and postmaster-general, none of whom are members of the legislature. Congress holds its sittings in Washington, the cap. of the republic. The judicial power is vested in a chief justice and 8 associate judges, and of 9 supreme district judges and 34 common district judges, with right of appeal, in certain cases, to the circuit courts, and also to the supreme court. The system of law throughout the states is the common law of England, modified by local acts of the states and of the federal government. Educational establishments are very numerous, both of the higher and more elementary kinds, and the national allowance for education for 1892 amounted to 20,000,000 dollars. The revenue of the states is derived chiefly from customs and imposts, sale of public lands, and but rarely from direct taxation. Total revenue for 1892, amounted to 49,728,386 dollars; expenditure 46,007,896 dollars; federal debt 47,180,508 dollars; aggregate debts of the different states 191,508,922 dollars. In 1892, the average of the United States amounted to 26,208.08 dollars in gold, 847,310 dollars in silver, and 51,820 dollars in copper; total 57,104,508.

Negro slaves were first introduced from Africa by a Dutch ship, in 1639. The slave-trade was afterwards carried on by English ships exclusively, for 150 years. On the declaration of independence, in 1776, there were about 500,000 negro slaves in the country, distributed over all the colonies, but chiefly in the southern states. The slave population was, in 1800, 993,041; in 1830, 1,539,094; in 1840, 2,437,253; and in 1850, 3,204,077. Of these there were, in the 15 slave-holding states, 3,204,000—the remainder being distributed throughout the districts and territories. The free population of these 15 states amounted, at the same date, to 6,413,151; the proportion of free to slaves being nearly as 2 to 1. There are 400,000 free people of African origin in the States, who are the descendants of slaves.

is not formerly slaves themselves. In 1862, 1400 slaves escaped from their owners, 1400 were manumitted, and 602 colored emigrants were sent to Liberia by the Colonization Society.

The first British colony settled in Virginia in 1607. The first symptoms of the American revolution commenced in 1773; the first battle was fought at Lexington in April 1775. The war terminated by the surrender of Lord Cornwallis, October 1783; and in same year, the first Congress assembled in Philadelphia. In September 1789, the constitution was adopted, and General Washington was elected president. The Confederation gradually extended its territory westward, displacing the aboriginal population. In 1846, Texas was annexed; in 1848 New Mexico and Utah were ceded, and in the same year California was acquired from Mexico. In 1803, Washington Territory was formed of part of Oregon, on the Pacific coast.

Uxuguat, a large river of South America, one of the chief tributaries of the Plata, rises in Brazil, prov. Rio Grande do Sul, flows successively W. and S., separating that prov. and Uruguay on the E. from the Misiones and dep. Entre Rios (Buenos Ayres) on the W., and joins the Parana to form the Plata estuary, 40 m. N. Buenos Ayres. Total course estimated at nearly 800 m. Chief affs., the Ybicuy and Rio Negro (Banda Oriental). On it are the towns and villa. Yapeya, Belem, and Purificacion. Its navigation is impeded by numerous cataracts and rocky reefs. Its chief tributary, the Rio Negro from the E., is 260 m. in length, in a considerable part of which it is navigable.

Uxuguat or Banda-Oriental, a maritime republic of South America, on the N.E. side of the Plata estuary, which separates it from Buenos Ayres, has W. the Uruguay river, N. Brazil, and E. the Lake and neutral territory of Mirim, and the S. Atlantic Ocean. It is divided into five departments. Area estimated at 190,000 sq. m., and pop. (in 1855) at 150,000. Cap. Monte Video. Surface along the coast level, and bare of wood; inland mostly undulating, except in the centre, where it is mountainous, full of ravines and heights, clothed with forests, and abounding with wild animals. It is watered by numerous affs. of the Uruguay; the principal, the Rio Negro, traverses its centre from E. to W. Climate generally damp, but temperate and healthy; in the winter heavy rains and cold winds are prevalent, but in the lowlands frost is said to be unknown. Natural pastures are very extensive and luxuriant. Cattle and horses form the principal wealth of the population, and their products, hides, skins, hair, horns, jerked beef, and tallow, are the chief exports. Wheat, maize, beans, and melons, are produced, and the country is adapted for the culture of most fruits of temperate climates, but at present no more agricultural produce is raised than is required for home consumption, and agricultural processes are of the rudest kind. Granite and limestone rocks prevail in the mountainous region; jasper and chalcedony are met with, but few, if any, mines are wrought. Monte Video, the cap., is the centre of all the foreign trade, which is valued at from 3,000,000 to 4,000,000 dollars annually. Other towns, are Maldonado, La Colonia, Sta Lucia, Jose, and Carlos; Camelon, Soriana, and Cerro Largo. Uruguay has formed an independent republic ever since 1828, but of late years it has had unceasingly to contend against the intrigues and hostility of Buenos Ayres. In 1853 a revolution occurred, but on the interference of a Brazilian army, order was restored.

Island, when in January 1845, they numbered only 57 persons, who were so prostrated in spirit, that it was deemed but an act of humanity to send them back to their own country. This was done, their wants being attended to by Government, and they have since been gradually dying out. The scenery is diversified with lofty mountains and immense forests, particularly over the western parts, which are still all but uninhabited. Of the eastern mountain range, Ben Lomond is 5,000 feet in elevation, Ben Nevis 3,910 feet, and Mount Wellington, a magnificent pile, rising close to the sea level behind Hobart Town, is 4,200 ft. The western range has Mount Humboldt 5,520 feet, Dry's Bluff 4,500 feet, Mount Arrowsmith 4,075 feet, and Valentine's Peak, which is seen 60 m. off, 6,000 feet. The chief rivers (in the S.), are the Derwent and its branches, and the Huon, and in the N. the Tamar, with its tributaries the North and South Esk, the Mersey, and the Forth. The chief harbours are Storm Bay, leading to Hobart Town, and Macquarie Harbour, on the West coast. The soil is good, but owing to the prevalence of the forest, the labour of clearing has been very great, and thus of late there has been no great extension of cultivation. The climate is salubrious and delightful. At Port Arthur in Tasman's Peninsula, S. lat. 44° 10', the mean temp. of the year is 58°, of the coldest month 53°, of the warmest 62°: the mean temp. of the whole island being about 53°. The average annual rain-fall there is 44 in., but in the island generally it is less, averaging about 21 inches. The staple products are wool, grain and fruits, and timber. The live stock numbered in 1857, sheep 1,879,113, cattle 81,169, horses 19,837. The imports in 1857 were 1,271,071, the exports 1,354,634. Of the latter, wool amounted to 393,946, or by weight 5,701,815 lbs.; agricultural produce was 478,277, and timber 123,963. Acres under culture (1857) 134,108, of which 63,357 acres were devoted to wheat. For same year, the ships inwards were 547, of 106,548 tons, and outwards 554, of 107,371 tons. Estimated revenue for 1858, 163,978, expenditure 206,975, public debt of 223,680. There is an Imperial grant of 25,000, a-year, in consideration of the heavy expenditure for police and gaols, caused by the convict elements of the population. The religion of the people, by census 1857, appears as Church of England 47,714; Church of Scotland 7,220; Wesleyan Methodists 4,721; other Protestants 3,830; Roman Catholics 16,832; Jews 429; Mohammedans, etc., 48. The settled part of the colony is comprised in 14 counties. The towns of chief note are Hobart Town in the S., containing 18,258 inhabitants, and Launceston in the N., at the head of the Tamar navigation, 7,874. Longford, Perth, Westbury, Oatlands, New Norfolk, etc. The island has an extensive system of electric telegraph. In common with the adjacent colonies, Tasmania enjoys self-government. The governor is appointed by the Queen, and there are two houses of legislation, both being elective, but upon different qualifications. Discovered by Tasman in 1642.

VENZUELA, the most N. of the republics in South America, its territory lying chiefly between lat. 2° and 12° N., lon. 60° and 78° W., having E. British Guiana, S. Brazil, W. New Granada, and N. the Caribbean Sea. Estimated area 426,713 sq. m. Pop. (1851) 1,356,000, consisting of Whites, Indians, Negroes, and mixed races, and very thinly distributed. The E. Cordillera of the Andes extends through its N. part from W. to E., terminating in the peninsula of Paria. South of this is a wide plain country traversed by the Orinoco, the whole course of which river is in this region. Other principal rvs. are the Meta, Apure, Arauca, and Carony, tributary to the Orinoco; the Casiquiare connecting it with the Amazon, and the Tucuyo, Zulia, and Cuyuni in the N. and E. The Lakes Maracaybo and Valencia, and islands Margarita and Tortuga, belong to this republic. All the finest tropical products grow luxuriantly.

The principal sources of wealth are cacao, coffee, tobacco, indigo, cotton, sarsaparilla, dye-woods, timber, and especially cattle, and the articles of trade which they yield. Total value of exports (1845) 894,745, mostly sent to the West India Islands, Great Britain, the United States, and Spain. Imports comprise woven fabrics, chiefly cottons and linens, flour and provisions, hardwares, soap, wines, and specie; total value in the same year, 793,377, sent mostly from Great Britain and colonies, the United States, Denmark, and Germany. Government vested in a senate and house of representatives; the executive power being in the hands of a president and vice-president. The territory is divided into the five depts. of Maturin, Caracas or Venezuela, Zulia, Apure, and Orinoco; and into 13 provs., each of which has its intendant or governor. Chief cities, Caracas, the cap., Valencia, Maracaybo, and Barquisimeto.

VENTICABLO, a town of Spain. [BENICABLO.]

VENEZIA (Italian Venezia, German Venedig, ancient Venetia), a fortified city of Austrian Italy, cap. gov. and deleg., and one of the two caps. of the Lombardo-Venetian kingdom, in the lagoons of Venice, a sort of vast lake, separated from the Adriatic by a long belt of low land, and 2 m. from the continent, with which it is connected by a stupendous bridge of 322 arches, forming part of the railway to Padua; lat. of St. Mark 45° 25' 9" N., lon. 12° 20' 2" E. Pop. (1854) 106,333, besides the garrison. Mean temperature of year 55° 3, winter 36°, summer 75°, Fahr. It is the see of a Roman Catholic primate, Greek and Armenian bishops, and the residence of the viceroy during part of the winter; the centre of the maritime establishments of Austria, and the residence of the commander-general of the imperial marines. Venice, for many centuries, the cap. of a celebrated republic, the first maritime and commercial power of the world, and one of the finest cities in Europe, is unique, both as regards position and construction, being built entirely on piles, and occupying 70 or 80 small islands, separated by 149 canals, which are crossed by 386 bridges. The chief of the former is the Grand Canal, 100 to 180 feet wide, and bordered by magnificent palaces and churches; it separates the city into two nearly equal portions, which are connected by the bridge of the Rialto, built of white marble, and consisting of a single arch. The streets or lanes are so narrow and intricate as to render the city a vast labyrinth, and being fit only for foot passengers, the place of wheel carriages is supplied by small barges, called gondolas, the peculiar form and great number of which constantly traversing the principal canals, presents one of the chief characteristics of the city. The largest street, the Merceria, in which are the best shops, is only 15 feet wide; the principal promenades are the square of St Mark; and the public gardens, which are nearly surrounded by the sea. Among its many squares, the most remarkable for extent, regularity, and beauty of situation, is the Piazza di San Marco (St Mark), on the south side of the city, at the entrance of the Grand Canal. On the E. side of this is a smaller square called the Piazzetta, and at the angle, between these, is the church of St Mark. Venice contains a vast number of magnificent churches and palaces, adorned with the paintings of Titian and the frescoes of Tintoretto and Paul Veronese. The chief edifices are the palace of the Procuratie Vecchie and the Procuratie Nuove, which occupy the greater part of the square of St Mark, around which extends a vast gallery, containing elegant shops and cafés. The portion of the Procuratie Nuove next the Piazzetta is the chef d'œuvre of Sansovino, and a remarkably fine building. The old library of St Mark occupies a magnificent hall, and in the same building is the Zecca or mint, where, in 1284, the celebrated ducat of Venice, the most ancient coin in Europe, was struck. The former palace of the dogs, built by Marino Faliero in the 14th century, is remarkable for its architecture, and its imposing mass; its interior is decorated with many of the finest works of the great masters. The Bridge of Sighs connects this palace with the former prisons and dungeons of the inquisition. Among the ecclesiastical edifices, the most magnificent is the church of St Mark, with its golden ceilings, its pavement of jasper and porphyry, its 500 columns of black, white, and veined marble, bronze, alabaster, verde antique and serpentine. It contains the celebrated Palla d'Ora, a species of mosaic, in gold, silver, and enamel, made at Constantinople in the 10th century, and a vast reliquary, with many antiquities and objects of art. Over the portal of this magnificent temple, the 4 celebrated bronze horses which were founded at Corfu, and successively adorned Athens, Rome, Constantinople, Venice, and Paris, were replaced in 1815. In front of St Mark are three bronze pedestals, with masts, now bearing the Austrian standards, and near it are the Campanile tower, the Torre dell'Orlogio, or clock tower, and 2 granite columns, one surmounted by the lion of St Mark, and the other by the statue of St Theodore. The other churches are San Giorgio Maggiore, the St Mark, and the church of the St Mark, with a fine cupola, the churches of the St Mark, the St Mark, and those of St Mark and of St Peter, formerly the patriarchal see, and the church of the St Mark, with a fine monument to Canova; most of these, with the doges or custom-house, are situated on the Grand Canal. Venice has 6 theatres, the 7th and finest having been destroyed by fire in 1836. The arsenal, situated on an island, surrounded by high walls, was long the first in Europe, and still preserves some importance. The chief scientific and literary institutions are the lyceum, with a rich cabinet of natural history and a botanic garden, two royal gymnasia, and the seminary of the Saluta, occupying the former convent of this name, with valuable scientific collections, and a rich library: normal high school, marine college, academy and school of the fine arts, the oldest of its kind in existence. The library of St Mark, comprising 90,000 vols., with a fine cabinet of antiquities and medals, is one of the richest in Italy, and among the largest in Europe. One of the most remarkable institutions in Venice, is that of the Archivio Generale, which contains an immense mass of documents relative to the history of Venice. In the middle ages, Venice had a monopoly of the manufacture of glass, but this has greatly declined, and its manufactures are now confined to mirrors, jewellery, artificial pearls, silk, and porcelain; its printing and book trade is still extensive. Imports comprise sugar, coffee, and other colonial produce, cotton and woollen fabrics, cotton yarn and raw cotton, hardware goods, dye-stuffs, salted fish and grain. Exports, silk and silk goods, glass wares, and books. The origin of Venice dates from the period of the invasion of Attila in 452, when a number of the inhabitants of Venetia, and other parts of Italy, taking refuge in the islands of the Adriatic, formed a confederation to oppose the barbarians. In 697 they elected, as the head of their government, a doge or duke (dux). The Venetian States formed themselves into a republic in 809. In 997 they took possession of the town of Narenta, a nest of pirates, and thus commenced their maritime power; they afterwards subjugated all the towns of Dalmatia. The crusades were a source of aggrandisement for Venice. At the end of the 12th century, the Venetians made themselves masters of part of the Morea, Corfu, Cephalonia, and Crete. During two centuries they monopolized the commerce of India by the route of Egypt; but they lost this on the discovery of the passage by the Cape of Good Hope. The state attained the height of its prosperity in the 15th century. It began to decline at the beginning of the 16th century, and its overthrow was completed by the French in 1797. By the treaty of Presburg, in 1805, it was made over, with the prov. of the continent, to the kingdom of Italy, and was held by the French till 1814, when it reverted to Austria. In 1848, the Venetians revolted against the Austrians, and held the city for several months. The gov. of Venice comprises 8 delegations, which bear the names of their capes. Venice, Padua, Vicenza, Verona, Rovigo, Treviso, Belluno, and Udine. [Lombard.]—The Gulf of Venice is formed by the Adriatic, on the N.E. coast of Italy, bounded by the Piave and Brenta.

VERA CRUZ, a maritime dep. of the Mexican Confederation, between lat. 17° 30' & 22° N., lon. 91° 45' and 93° 45', having E. the Gulf of Mexico, and landwards the states San Luis Potosí, Mexico, Puebla, Oaxaca, and Tehuantepec. Area 27,595 sq. m. Pop. 254,725, mostly of a mixed race. Surface elevated, except near the coast, where it is extremely unhealthy; but it is also highly fertile and luxuriant. Principal rivers, the Coatzacoalcas, Montezuma, and Alvarado. Chief products, vanilla, tobacco, sugar, cotton, cacao, and live-stock, and its cotton manufactures are somewhat extensive. Chief towns, Vera Cruz, the cap., Xalapa, Orizava, and Tampico. Through this state leads the main route to Mexico from the Atlantic.

VERA CRUZ, the principal seaport town of the Mexican Confederation, in above state, on the Gulf of Mexico, nearly 200 m. E.S.E. Mexico. Lat. of lighthouse, 19° 11' 9" N., lon. 96° 8' W. Pop. 6,500. It is regularly and well built and clean, but in a most unhealthy situation, surrounded by sand-hills and marshes. Houses mostly large, flat-roofed, several stories in height, and constructed around court-yards. Here are numerous domed churches, and other stone buildings, and a good stone mole. The harbour is a mere roadstead, between the mainland and the island of San Juan de Ulloa, which is covered with a strong fortress, and has a lighthouse, with a revolving light, 79 feet above the sea. It communicates by railway with San Juan. Storms and violent N. winds here often injure shipping; but Vera Cruz has an extensive trade, exporting bullock, cochineal, sugar, flour, indigo, provisions, drugs, vanilla, logwood, and pimento, and importing woven fabrics, cacao, paper, brandy, wine, and metals. In 1845, 295 ships, aggregate burden 35,415 tons, chiefly Mexican, United States, French, British, and Spanish, entered, with cargoes to the value of 468,200l.; and 271 do., burden 31,229 tons, cleared out of the port. Vera Cruz was bombarded and taken by the army of the U. S., North America, in 1847.—Old Vera Cruz is a village, 15 m. N.W., where Cortes disembarked in 1518.

VERAGUA (SANTIAGO DE), a town of Central America, but belonging, with its prov., to the republic of New Granada, dep. Isthmus, 22 m. N. Montijo Bay, Pacific Ocean, and 128 m. W.S.W. Panama. Pop. 5,600. It is well built, and has some trade in gold dust, copper, cotton, and dyes.—The prov. Veragua, the most W. of the state New Granada, between lat. 7° 15' and 9° 40' N., lon. 80° 20' and 82° 50' W., extends from the Pacific Ocean to the Caribbean Sea, and has on its N. side the lagoon of Chiriqui, and W. the state of Costa Rica, Central America. Most of the surface is covered with mountains and forests. The rivers have short courses, but frequently inundate the country after heavy rains. The town of David, at its S.W. point, is the principal place in the province.

VERA PAX, a dep. of Central America, state Guatemala, mostly between lat. 16° and 18° N., lon. 88° 30' and 91° 40' W., having S. the prov. Guatemala, N. Yucatan, E. British Honduras, and W. Chiapa and Yucatan. Pop. (1852) 8,200. Its centre is a region of lofty mountains, bordered by lower lands on the banks of considerable rivers; the Rio Grande or Motagua, flowing E., bounds it on the S. and E.; the Rio Pasion or Usamasinta, flowing W. forms its N. frontier; an affluent of the latter bounds it on the W., and the Polochic, and its affluents, traverse its centre, flowing E. to the Golfo Dulce, which is comprised within this province. Climate very various; in the uplands it is severe, in the lowlands hot, and heavy rains and storms are frequent. Products comprise the sugar cane, which grows in great luxuriance; cacao, annatto, dyewoods, cedar, and other large timber adapted for ship-building, cotton, balsam, and dragon's blood; but the almost utter absence of roads interposes great obstacles to commerce. Besides the city of Cobán, the principal places are Tacit, Salama, and Robunal.

VERAWOW, the principal town in the desert of Parkur, Scinde, on a fresh water lake, 3 m. in circumference, lat. 24° 33' N., lon. 70° 46' E. It comprises 350 houses, and near it are extensive remains of the ruined city Pareemuggar.

Situated near the gorges of the Tyrol, and surrounded by the fortresses of Peschiera, Mantua, and Legnago, Verona has always been considered an important position for the defence of Upper Italy. It is enclosed by a series of turreted walls, and is so strongly fortified as to be reckoned the key of Upper Italy. From its fine situation, rich historical remains, and literary institutions, it is one of the most interesting cities in Italy. The principal public edifices are the church of St. Zeno, supposed to date from the 7th century; the cathedral, built in the 9th century; the church of St. Anastasia, remarkable for its great size and its monuments; and that of St. George, for its fine paintings; two magnificent gates; the palace of the Grand Guardia, a modern edifice; the palace of consiglio, and the custom-house. Its Roman antiquities comprise the celebrated amphitheatre, a building of imposing grandeur, the most perfect of its kind, and the only one still used for public spectacles; traces of a Roman theatre and two Roman arches. The tombs of the Scaligeri, a curious monument of the Middle Ages, are a series of Gothic pyramids surmounted by an equestrian statue of each prince. The literary institutions of Verona comprise a lyceum with fine scientific collections, episcopal seminary, the royal school for the education of ladies, 3 gymnasia, a school of painting and design, academy of agriculture, commerce and arts, a botanic garden, a philharmonic academy, 2 valuable public libraries, the museum of the lapidario, with remarkable Etruscan inscriptions. A congress was held here in 1822. It is the birthplace of Cornelius Nepos, Catullus, the elder Pliny, Paul Veronese, Blanchini, the Marquis Maffei, and many other distinguished men. Verona is renowned for its dye-works. It has manufs. of woollens and cottons; numerous silk mills moved by water power, and an extensive trade in silk and rural produce.

It is divided into the quarters St. Louis and Notre Dame, to which Montreuil is attached, and is remarkable for the regularity of its construction. The chief edifices are the church of St. Louis, the prefecture, and the chancery. The palace of Versailles was restored during the reign of the late Louis Philippe, and is now used as an historical museum: the immense galleries contain a series of paintings and statues arranged in chronological order. Connected with the palace are a decorated chapel and theatre, an orangery, flower gardens, and a park, in which are statues and fountains supplied with water by the machine of Marly, and at the extremity of the park the two palaces called the Great and Little Trianon. Versailles is a bishop's see, and has a national college, a normal school, many scientific and literary societies, a public library of 55,000 vols., and a chamber of commerce. The palace of Versailles, built by Louis XIV., was, from 1673 to 1790, the residence of the kings of France. Many treaties have been signed here, at one of which, in 1763, England recognized the independence of the United States of North America; and here, on 20th June 1789, the representatives of the communes of France constituted the national assembly, and took the famous oath termed the "Jeu de Peaux!" From 1790 to 1837, Versailles was nearly deserted; but, since the opening of the museum in the latter year, it has regained much of its former importance. It is the birthplace of Philip V. of Spain; Louis XV., XVI., and XVII., and Charles X. of France; the Abbé de l'Épée, Ducis, and General Roche.

Lat. of crater 40° 49' N., lon. 14° 26' E. It rises out of a fertile and luxuriant plain to the height of 3,747 feet above the sea; the diameter of the circular area occupied by it and Monte Somma being about 6 m. Its lower part is a sloping plain, covered with stones and scorie, 3 m. in length, and rising to 2,000 feet, above which a cone of black stones extends to 3,500 feet. It is flanked on the land side by Monte Somma, an abrupt circular precipice. The summit of its cone is 2,000 feet in diameter, and after the eruption of 1899, had in its centre a crater 1,500 feet in diameter, and 500 feet deep. Somma and Vesuvius are different in their geological formation; the former consists of leucite augite, labradorite, and some nodules of olivine. Vesuvius is almost wholly composed of lava and scorie. Around it a larger number of sample minerals have been discovered than on any other area of like dimensions; and the vegetable products on its flanks comprise euphorbias and many other plants not found elsewhere in Italy. The famous wine, Isagraz chereh, is raised on its sides. The first recorded eruption of Mount Vesuvius occurred in the year 79, when the elder Pliny perished, and the cities Herculaneum, Pompeii, and Stabius were overwhelmed and buried by lava and ashes. From that time to 1855, 49 eruptions are recorded, of which the most celebrated occurred in 472, 1779, 1794, 1820, 1834, and 1839.

VICTORIA (formerly called the Port Phillip District, or Southern District of New South Wales, and Australia Felix), a British colonial territory in the S E part of Australia, comprised within lat. 34° and 38° S, and lon. 141° and 150° E, bounded on the W by the 141st meridian, beyond which is South Australia, on the S by Bass Straits to Cape Howe; on the N by the Murray eastwards to its source, and thence by a triangular shape, with the apex at Cape Howe, and the W. boundary, as a line of base, extending 260 miles. The length from Cape Howe to the boundary is 500 m., and the average breadth 140 to 200 m. The area is computed at 86,831 sq. m. Pop. 1851, 77,346, 1853, 49,000, including 40,000 Chinese. The aborigines, in 1851, were only 1768, at the first settlement, 1834-5, 20,000. There are few labourers of note, except Port Phillip. The country is remarkable, as being very generally covered with grass, and either open or overspread with open forests. Towards the east is a considerable Alpine region, whence from the northern and western slopes, issue the chief part of the great water shed of the Murray. The highest peak of these ranges, the Warragong, or Australian Alps, rises to 8,663 feet, which is the height of Karrihogong in New South Wales, a little beyond the Victoria frontier. Mount Kosciusko, near it, is 6,510 feet. In the Grampians to the westward, Mount William rises to 4,500 feet. There are many volcanic hills throughout the western districts. The chief river is the Murray, whose main stream flows from the Australian Alps, although, as regards length of course, the branch called the Darling, flowing from the north, claims pre-eminence. From the south, flow into the Murray those rivers that drain the Victoria territory.—Mitta Mitta, Ovens, Goulburn, Campaspa, Loddon, Avoca, and Wimmeri, which last, after passing lakes Hindmarsh and Albacutya, loses itself in the sand and scrub, excepting when its upper waters are swollen with heavy rains. The other rivers are the Snowy river and several streams of Gipps Land, flowing into its lake system, the Yarra Yarra passing Melbourne, the Burwon passing Geelong, and the Glenelg at the western boundary. The climate is variable, but healthful. In summer there are frequent hot winds from the N. N. W., and much dust since the traffic has barred the surface of grass near the chief towns. The mean of the hottest month (January) (1856), was 67°-9, of the coldest, July (1857), 48°-3. The highest temperature of January was 98°, the lowest of July 47°. There is thus frost, and occasionally ice. Snow is rare. Rain falls mostly from June to September inclusive. The average of 1847-51 showed 32.63 in. annually. In 1853, the sheep numbered 6,033,267, in 1858, they had fallen to 4,766,022. Cattle and horses in 1858 were respectively 614,537, and 55,083 head. Agriculture has made great progress. Exports 1857, 15,072,512; Imports 1857, 17,264,308. Shipping inwards, 1851, 710, tonnage 128,859; 1857, 2,190, tonnage 694,664. The chief export was wool up to 1854, and afterwards gold. The southern districts of Victoria, discovered in 1851, extend over about 16,000 square miles; but of this wide area, the parts actually worked as gold fields are quite fractional. They are in the following order of relative importance, according to the quantities of gold brought down by secret in the year 1857, viz., Ballarat, 200,948,700 oz.; Sandhurst, etc. (Bendigo), 226,018

ss.; Maryborough, etc., 348,751 oz.; Beechworth, etc. (Ovens), 345,349 oz.; Castlemain, etc. (Mount Alexander), 315,777 oz. The public revenue, exclusive of loans or special funds, for 1886, was 3,039,791*l.*, while for 1887 it was only 316,532*l.* The revenue is derived chiefly from customs' duties and land sales. In 1867, 202,883*l.* were expended in conveying free 14,369 emigrants. Average passage from London or Liverpool to Port Phillip 96 days. In religious affairs there are no national establishments; but an aid of 50,000*l.* is annually distributed to all the Christian sects that will accept it proportioned to population. Education, with reference to State support, is conducted under the two systems called National and Denominational, the latter being most prevalent; 125,000*l.* were voted for 1887. A new system, on a secular basis, is proposed by the government, to supersede these rival modes. There is a public library which cost 19,400*l.*, and an university on a most costly scale, but as yet only partly finished. The colony is divided (since 1848) into 24 counties and 9 districts, the latter being the interior parts as yet unincorporated into counties. The chief towns are Melbourne, which with its suburbs has a pop. of 31,239; Geelong, with 23,374, and the smaller but incorporated towns of Ballarat, Sandhurst, Castlemain, Beechworth, Portland, Kyneton, etc. Roads and railroads are being extensively constructed. The electric telegraph is in operation. In 1853, Victoria was granted self government. The ballot system and manhood suffrage have been enacted. The governor is of imperial nomination, and is assisted by the Colonial Parliament, which consists of a council and assembly, the first elected by a property qualification as to voter and member, the second without either.

VICTORIA, a co. of W. Australia, mostly between lat. 31° and 31° 30' S., lon. 116° and 117° E., having N. the co. Glenelg, E. Durham, S. York, and W. Twiss. Principal settlements are Bejoording and Toodyoy, on the Toodyoy River. Numerous heights and other localities in the Australian colonies, have this name.

VICTORIA, a district of the Cape Colony, South Africa, composed of what was formerly deemed neutral territory, on the E. frontier of the colony, between the Great Fish and Keiskama rivers, by the latter of which it is separated from British Kaffraria. Area estimated at 1,000,000 acres. Pop. (1850) 7,643. In it are Alice Town, and Forts Peddie, Fitzroy, and Albert.

VICTORIA, a town of the British colony of Hong-Kong, China, stretches 4 m. along its N. coast, and has numerous storehouses and European dwellings. Founded in 1842. Pop. about 10,000.

It stands on the W. side of an island, 15 m. in circumference, has a governor's residence, and a harbour defended by several forts. Its vicinity produces rice, manioc, sugar, and bananas, in which goods it has an active coasting trade. Frigates can sail up to the town.

VICTORIA, N. Australia. [Port Essington.]

VICTORIA or ALEXANDRINA LAKE, in South Australia, is on the S.E. side of the settled part of that colony, between lat. 35° 6' and 35° 33' S., lon. 139° and 139° 45' E., enclosed by the co.

Hindmarsh, Sturt, and Russell, and opening S.W. ward by a short passage into Encounter Bay. Length and breadth about 30 m. each. On its N.W. side it receives the Murray river, of which it is an expansion; it also receives the Bremer, Angus, and Finnis rivers, is connected S.E. ward with Lake Albert, by a strait 5 m. in length, and contains Hindmarsh and some other islands. Its N. and W. banks are low, and skirted with plains like those around Adelaide; E. and S. shores mostly undulating, interspersed with bold headlands. Its navigation is safe, but access from the sea is impeded by a sand-bar at the mouth of the strait.

VICTORIA, a lake of Central Asia, in the tableland of Pamir, 15,600 feet above the sea.

VICTORIA LAND, the name given to the supposed Antarctic continent discovered by Sir James Ross in 1841. Its shores were seen and partly explored from lat. 70° to 79° S. Near its N. extremity, in lon. 168° 12' E., is Mount Erebus, an active volcano, elevation 12,400 feet; and Mount Terror, 10,900 feet. The position of the south magnetic pole was also ascertained by Captain Ross to be in lat. 75° 5' S., lon. 154° 8' E.

VICTORIA LAND, British N. America, is a name given by its discoverer, Mr Simpson, to the region between lon. 103° and 108° W., and between lat. 68° N., and a strait of the Arctic Ocean.

VICTORIA RIVER, N. Australia, joins the Indian Ocean by the wide estuary Queen's Channel, E. Cambridge Gulf, lat. 14° 46' S., lon. 129° 21' E.; the estuary between Turtle and Pearce Points being 26 m. in width. It has been traced inland to lat. 15° 9' S., lon. 130° 53' E., where it was found still flowing from S.E. to N.W. Opposite its mouth are several islands; its banks are bold and often steep; and 50 miles inland it rushes rapidly between rocky ranges from 500 to 600 feet in height; but it is said to be navigable for vessels of large burden for at least 60 m. from its mouth. About 80 m. from its mouth it traverses a valley 16 m. wide, and of alluvial soil. The country along its banks is alternately fertile and barren.—11. a river of N.E. Australia, discovered in 1848 by Sir T. Mitchell, and found flowing W ward in lat. 24° 14' S., lon. 144° 34' E.

Vienna (Germ. Wien, and. Finsbena), a city of Central Europe, cap. of the empire of Austria, of the archduchy of Austria, and of the gov. of Lower Austria, in a fertile plain, near right or S. bank of the Danube, which here receives the small rivers Wien and Alster. Lat. (of observatory, 51° 58' feet above the sea) 48° 12' 36" N., lon. 16° 25' m. E. Pop. (1853), with the liberties, 519,467. Mean temperature of year 51° 3, winter 32° 9, summer 63° 4, Fahr. The situation is unhealthy; climate very variable; fogs are frequent, and the low-lands and lower parts of the city are exposed to inundations. It is an archbishop's see, and the residence of the Protestant superintendent for the W. provs. of the empire. It is divided into an old and a new city, the former 3 m. in circumference, and nearly circular. In 1837 it contained only 1,229 houses, while its 34 suburbs contained 7,115. The city is surrounded by a broad fosse and a wall 40 to 50 feet high, forming the Bastei, a fashionable promenade; it is entered by 12 gates. Beyond the fence is the glacis, a public walk, extending nearly all round the city, and separating it from its suburbs. The gate called the Burgthor is very fine. Among the many public edifices, the chief are the Burg or imperial palace, residence of the emperor, with a library and an imperial chapel and theatre; the mint, university, academy of the fine arts, observatory, imperial and city arsenal, and the custom-house. There are numerous private palaces, containing valuable libraries, paintings, and other objects of art, most of which are open to the public. The cathedral of St Stephen is a Gothic edifice, with a tower 463 feet in elevation. The church of St Peter is built on the model of the basilica of St Peter at Rome. The educational, literary, and scientific establishments comprise the university, which is celebrated for its school of medicine, with a library of 120,000 vols., and a theatre of anatomy; it had, in 1842, 85 professors and 5,396 students; the school of Orientalists for training interpreters; the Theatrinum, founded by Maria Theresa; the Josephine academy of medicine and surgery for the army; an academy of the fine arts, with 18 professors; a polytechnic institute, normal school, academy of engineers, with 18 professors; a veterinary institute; a conservatory of music; 6 gymnasia or colleges; and an observatory, with a school of astronomy. The imperial library contains 300,000 vols., many thousand MSS., an immense collection of engravings, and the famous Tabula Peutingeriana, a map of the Roman empire in the 4th century. The other collections are that of paintings in the Belvedere, the lower part of which contains the Ambras collection of ancient armour and jewels, the most interesting in Europe; and the imperial cabinets of antiquities, medals, and natural history. The imperial arsenal contains 15,000 stand of arms. The principal theatres are the Hof or palace theatre, the Kärnthnerthor, and the comic theatre. It has a deaf-mute asylum, and numerous well-conducted charitable establishments. Vienna is the chief manufacturing city of the empire; its manufactures comprise silk velvets, shawls, woollens, ribbons, carpets, cottons, paper, gold and silver lace, porcelain, and musical instruments. Coach-building, book and map printing, form important branches of industry. It has an imperial cannon foundry, and manufactures of small arms. Its commerce is extensive, and was greatly increased by the establishment of the national bank in 1818, the navigation of the Danube by steamboats, and the opening of railways to the E., S., and W. In the suburbs are the cavalry barracks, the Belvedere palace, the church of St Charles, the theatre on the Wien, the great public hospital containing 2,000 beds, and receiving annually 15,000 to 18,000 patients, the vast building for the imperial manuf. of porcelain, and numerous private palaces with magnificent gardens. The cap. of Austria is ornamented by many superb promenades, the chief of which is the Prater, a natural forest in an island of the Danube, laid out in long alleys, and containing deer parks, numerous coffee-houses, a panorama, and circus; on five days it is crowded with pedestrians and the most splendid equipages. The others are the Augarten, a public park on the same island, and the Volksgarten, a beautiful public garden. The environs are very picturesque, surrounded by vineyards, and having the Kahlenberg mountains on the W., the islands of the Danube on the N., and on the S. the Schoenberg mountain, part of the Noric Alps; they are adorned by many villas and summer palaces, among which are the imperial palace of Schönbrunn, with a botanic garden and menagerie; the vill. of Maria Hitzing, with a theatre and a bath establishment; Laxenberg, with an imperial summer palace and a spacious park. Few cities are surrounded by so many fine gardens, many of which contain the richest and rarest plants. Vindobona was a station of the Roman legions in Upper Pannonia; it was afterwards cap. of the E. provs. of the empire of Charlemagne. The king of Hungary established his court here in 1484, and it soon became the fixed residence of the House of Austria. Vienna was besieged by the Turks in 1529, and again in 1683; on the latter occasion it was relieved by the Poles under John Sobieski. The French took it in 1806 and in 1809. The congress of Vienna, which fixed the present limits of the countries of Europe, was held here from November 1814 to June 1815. The city was held by the revolutionary party for a short time in 1848; the barricades were raised on 6th October, but it surrendered to the imperial troops on 30th of same month, having suffered severely from a bombardment. In 1853, a conference was held here to consider proposals for a peace with Russia.

VIENNA, several townships, U. S., N. America, the principal in New York, on Lake Oneida, 3 m. N.W. Utica. Pop. 3,393.—11, a vill., New York, on the Auburn and Rochester Railway. Pop. 1,600.—111, a vill., Maryland, on the Nanticoke, 55 m. S.E. Annapolis. Reg. shipping (1850) 13,478 tons.

VIENNE (HAUTE D'UPPER), a dep. of France, in the N.W., formed of parts of the old prov. Limousin, and surrounded by the depts. Creuse, Corrèze, Dordogne, Charente, Vienne, and Indre. Area 2,187 sq. m. Pop. 319,270. Cap. Limoges. Surface traversed by mountains, the principal chain of which separates the basins of the Loire and Garonne; highest point is Puy de Vieux, 3,200 feet in elevation. Climate cold from its elevation, and soil infertile in grain; but horses, cattle, and sheep are extensively reared. Minerals comprise tin, lead, copper, iron, coal, and porcelain clay. Chief manufactures, porcelain, cutlery, and paper. The dep. is divided into the arronds. of Limoges, Bellac, Rochechouart, and St Yrieux.

VIENNE (Vienne), a river of France, rises in the N. of the dep. Corrèze, passes St Leonard, Limoges, Confolens, Châtelleraut (where it becomes navigable), Chinon, and join the Loire on left at Candé, after a N. and N.W. course of 190 miles.

VIENNE, a dep. of France, in the N.W., formed by part of the old prov. Poitou, surrounded by the depts. Indre, Haute-Vienne, Charente, Deux-Sèvres, Main-et-Loire, and Loire. Area 2,669 sq. m. Pop. 317,798. Cap. Poitiers. Surface generally flat; it is watered by the Vienne and its affluent the Clain, the Charente in the S., the Gartempe and Creuse in the N.E., and the Dive in the N.W. Soil very unequal in fertility; chief crops of all kinds of cereals, chestnuts, flax, hemp, and maize of inferior quality. Fine horses, mules, and sheep are reared. The chief mineral products are iron and lithographic stones, and the principal manufacture is that of arms and cutlery at Châtelleraunt. The dep. is divided into the arrond. Châtelleraunt, Civray, Loudun, Montmorillon, and Poitiers.

VIENNE (Vienne), a comm. and town of France, dep. Isère, cap. arrond., 45 m. W.N.W. Grenoble, on l. b. of the Rhone, and on railway from Lyon to Avignon. Pop. 20,738. The town is situated between the Rhone and the mountains, and is traversed by the river Gere. It has a Gothic cathedral and numerous ancient remains, a comm. college, a tribunal of commerce, and manufactures of woollen cloths, linens, silk, and paper. In its vicinity are lead and silver mines; and near it, at Ampuis, the celebrated wine, called Côte-Rotie, is made.—Vienne was the cap. of the Allobroges; the Romans afterwards made it the metropolis of the Viennoise. A council was held here in 1311, which abolished the order of the Templars.

VIRGINIA, one of the U. S. of North America, in the South, between lat. 36° 30' and 40° N., lon. 75° 40' and 83° 30' W., having E. Chesapeake Bay and the Atlantic Ocean, and on other sides the states Maryland, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Tennessee, and North Carolina. Area 61,362 sq. m. Pop. 1,421,661, of whom 472,523 were slaves. The Appalachian mountains, in several parallel ranges, cover the centre of the state, and rise in some peaks to 6,000 feet above the ocean; they separate the James and Roanoke rivers, flowing into the Chesapeake Bay on the W., from affluents of the Ohio and Tennessee, which water the W. part of the state. The Ohio forms all the N. W., and the Potomac the N. E. frontier. For about 100 m. from the coast the surface is level, and in many parts swampy, or covered with pine barrens; further inland the valleys are of high fertility; the W. part of the state abounds with forests. Large quantities of wheat (though of inferior quality), with maize, oats, and rye, are raised, and about 1-3d of the tobacco produced in the Union is grown in this state, the crop of which in 1850 amounted to 25,000,000 lbs. Live-stock of all kinds are numerous. Nearly 380,000 tons of coal were raised in 1850. Some lead, gold, and other metals are produced, and the salt springs are important. Cotton, woolen, and metallic goods are made, but manufacturing industry is much less extended than in the states to the N. and E. In 1833, 624 miles of railway were open for traffic. Total value of exports (1850) 3,415,846 dolls., do. of imports 4,659,999 dolls.; the foreign trade had then for some years been declining. Public revenue (1849) 30,931 dollars, debt (1851) 11,248,062 dollars. Virginia is divided into 137 cos., and sends 13 representatives to Congress. Chief towns, Richmond, the cap., Norfolk, Petersburg, and Fredericksburg. This was the seat of the first colony planted by the English in the States' territory. The state was named in honour of Queen Elizabeth. It is the birthplace of Washington and Jefferson.

It is well watered by the Danube, and its affluents the Aluta, Schyl, Jalomulaua, and Dumbrovitz, and generally very fertile, but only one-third is cultivated. Climate extreme, hot and moist in summer, and very cold in winter. Chief crops, wheat, barley, rye, hemp, and tobacco. Maize is the chief food of the inhabitants. The vine thrives well. Forests are extensive, and pasturage excellent. Cattle and sheep extensively reared, and fine wool is exported. The inhabitants are chiefly Walachians, with a mixture of gypsies, Jews, Armenians, and Greeks, mostly of the Greek church, speaking a corrupt dialect of the Latin language. This country formed part of Dacia in the Roman empire. It was afterwards under the dominion of the Goths and Huns; it formed a separate kingdom in 1200. In 1479 it was conquered by Mohammed II.; it regained its independence for a short time, and afterwards formed a prov. of the Ottoman empire till 1859. By the treaty of Adrianople in 1859, it was placed under the protection of Russia, and its vassalage to Turkey is merely nominal. Its government is independent, but it pays tribute to the Porte. The Aspader or governor, is elected for life. The Russians invaded these principalities in 1855, which led to the war with Turkey, England, and France.

Of the above etc., Anthony, Carmichael, and high, Flint, Merioneth, and Montgomery, comprise North Wales; while South Wales consists of the shires of Brecknock, Cardigan, Carmarthen, Glamorgan, Radnor, and Pembroke. Except the island Anglesey, which has a level or undulating surface, nearly all Wales, especially its north half, is mountainous. Snowdon, in Carnarvonshire, is 3,557 feet. Cader-Idris, Merionethshire, 3,500 feet; the Brecknock Beacon (S. Wales), 2,662 feet, and many summits rise to between 1,500 and 3,000 feet above the sea. Chief rivers, the Dee, Severn, Wye, Usk, Towy, Taff, Dwy, Conway, and Clwyd, the vales of some of which are very fertile. Lakes are insignificant, that of Bala, the largest, is only 8 m. in length. Principal inlets are, on the W coast, Carnarvon and Cardigan Bays, St Bride's Bay, and Milford Haven; on the S. Carmarthen and Swansea, separated by the peninsula of Gower, and on the E. the estuary of the Dee, and the harbours of Beaumaris and Holyhead. Principal headlands, Brach-y-Pwll and St David's Head. Agriculture is extremely backward. Barley and oats are the chief grains raised; the culture of potatoes and turnips is extending. Farms mostly small, averaging in S. Wales only from 50 to 60 acres. Large numbers of cattle are reared. The number of sheep is estimated at 1,250,000, and the annual produce of wool at 10,000 packs. A hardy small breed of ponies is reared, especially in the co. Montgomery and Merioneth. Mining industry is highly important. Iron, copper, lead, silver, & ate, limestone, and in the S. large quantities of coal are raised, which last product is extensively exported, and used on the spot for smelting both British and foreign ores. In 1845, South Wales had 120 blast furnaces in operation, and 57 out of blast, making 581,240 tons of iron, and North Wales 14 furnaces, producing 22,466 tons of iron. The principal iron works are at and around Merthyr-Tydvil, Tredegar, Aberdare, and Rhonabon; at Swansea, large quantities of American and other copper ores are reduced. Manufactures of woollen fabrics, especially of flannel and hosiery, are very generally pursued in the cottages of the peasantry, particularly in North Wales, where Welshpool is the chief mart for these products. The cotton manufacture has extended into some of the N. co., and in 1845, 1,860 hands were employed in woollen, cotton, flax, and silk factories. There is a manufacture of slate articles at Bangor. Trade principally in the export of mineral produce, cattle, and woollen goods. Principal ports, Swansea, Newport, Cardiff, Carnarvon, and Beaumaris, besides which, Holyhead is a chief packet-station for communication with Ireland, and Milford is a naval port and the seat of a government dockyard. Roads through the principality are now generally good; and in the S. are several short railways, and a part of the Eilwernere Canal. Wales is in the ecclesiastical prov. of Canterbury, and divided into the 6 bishoprics of Llandaff, St David's, Bangor, and St Asaph. It contains 12 boroughs, besides contributory towns, each of which sends 1 mem. to H. of C., as does each of its coes. The aboriginal Celtic race still inhabit Wales, and speak a dialect of the Celtic language called the British or Cambrian. Wales was called Britannia Secunda by the Romans, who constructed many roads and stations in the country. It maintained a successful struggle against the Saxons, and was not wholly subdued by the Normans, until 1155, since which era, the last appearance of the English throne has always held the title of Prince of Wales. WASHINGTON, the cap. city of the U. S., North America, in the federal dist. of Columbia, on the Potomac, at the influx of the Anacostia, each here crossed by a bridge, 35 m. S.W. Baltimore. Lat. of observatory 38° 53' 28" N., lon. 77° 2' 48" W. Pop. (1840) 23,364; (1860) 40,001.

It is laid out with great regularity, and on an extensive plan. Public edifices are amongst the most splendid in the Union. The capitol, or seat of the United States' legislature, on a hill 75 feet above the Potomac, is of freestone, with a front 352 feet in length, a portico with 22 Corinthian columns, and several domes; it contains the chambers of the Senate and the House of Representatives, the Congress library of 56,000 vols., and supreme court of the United States; is surrounded by grounds covering 22 acres, and was erected at a cost of nearly 2,600,000 dollars. It is decorated internally with works of art. About 1½ m. to the N.W. is the official residence of the President of the United States, an elegant edifice also on a height, and near which are four large structures for the chief departments of the central government. The general post-office, treasury building, and patent office, the navy yard, arsenal, city hall, hospital, penitentiary, theatre, and upwards of 30 churches, and the Congress burying ground, are the other principal objects of interest. The "National Institution for the Promotion of Science," organized in 1840, has incorporated with it the Columbian Institute and Historical Society, and is governed by 12 directors, 6 appointed by the government. Other institutions are the Columbian and medical colleges, the Union and literary society, and the city library. Washington has manufactures of metallic goods and glass, and a retail business; but George-town, on Rock creek, adjacent, and Alexandria lower down the Potomac, absorb most of the foreign trade. A new park is in course of formation, in the centre of which will be a magnificent monument to General Washington, erected by public subscription. It communicates with Annapolis and Baltimore by railways, and with the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal by a branch terminating in the city, by ample busies. It became the seat of the federal government in 1800. Mount Vernon, the seat of General Washington, after whom the city was named, and where he was buried, is about 16 miles distant.—Mount Washington, the principal peak of the White mountains in New Hampshire, is 6,290 feet in elevation above the sea.

WEST AUSTRALIA (formerly Swan River Colony), a British colony occupying the S.W. angle of Australia, between lat. 30° and 35° S., long. 115° and 119° E. Length of settled dist. about 300 m., breadth 150 m. Pop. (1851) 5,886, but in 1855 increased to 13,588; native pop. about 1,500.

Three parallel mountain ranges traverse the co. from S. to N., rising in height from the coast inland. Elevation of Talbanoop, the culminating point, 5,000 feet. Granite rocks, with claystone and limestone, prevail. Columnar basalt is met with around Geographical Bay, and other localities. From this point to Shark Bay, a band of coal runs for about 600 m. Soil light and dry, both on the coast and in the interior. In the middle of the colony are bands of more fertile land, suited for the culture of the vine, olive, and fig, and where sandal-wood and other trees grow abundantly. Principal stream, Swan river, with its tributaries. In the interior are several salt lakes and pools, but the colony is in general not well watered. Climate arid, but comparatively healthy. Winter temperature 55°, summer 76°, Fahr. In 1855, 14,698 acres of land were under cultivation. In 1855 the sheep were 184,134, cattle 13,173, and horses 4,867. Iron is abundant, and some good lead ore, and ores of mercury and zinc are found. Trade chiefly with Britain, with occasional imports from Mauritius, India and China. Value of exports (1855) £6,514; do. of imports, 105,320l. The colony is ruled by a governor and council, and has 32 counties or districts. Chief towns, Perth, Fremantle, and Albany. After the cessation of transportation to Tasmania, this colony was, by consent of the more prominent colonists, made a penal settlement, a circumstance that has given a decided impetus to its commerce and population.

Total area of the Archipelago, according to Schomburgk (1848), 86,548 sq. m. Pop. 2,945,000. Other statements make the area greater. [AMERICA.] Many of the islands are of volcanic origin. Climate of the whole tropical, but modified by the surrounding ocean and the elevated surface of many of them. Sugar, coffee, cotton, dyewoods, and spices, are the chief products and exports. Columbus landed on St. Salvador, Bahama group, in October 1492; and the archipelago, under the erroneous impression, at the time of discovery, that it formed part of Asia, was called the West Indies. The Bermudan are not properly West Indian islands, although they were officially considered as such till 1834. The history of the West India Islands "from the period of their discovery in 1492 till 1816, presents little more than a melancholy series of calamities and crimes. The islands have been laid waste by hurricanes, and visited by pestilence; but the sufferings which have arisen from natural causes are few and trifling, in comparison with those which moral and political circumstances have produced." Among these may be classed the enslavement of the Indians, the introduction of slavery, the atrocities of the Buccaneers, and international wars. [Particular descriptions are given under the heads of the various islands.]

WEST-KAPPEL, a market town of Belgium, prov. West Flanders, 6 m. N.E. Brugge. Pop. 1,406.—II. a maritime town of the Netherlands, prov. Zealand, at the W. extremity of the island Walcheren, 7 m. W. Middelburg. Pop. 1,022.

WESTLYNCH, a pa. of England, co. Suffolk, 2½ m. E. Yoxford. Area 1,500 ac. Pop. 303.

WESTLYNCH, two par. of England.—I. co. Suffolk, 2 m. W.N.W. Bury-St-Edmunds. Area 880 ac. Pop. 118.—II. (Walsingham), co. Cambridge, 6 m. S.W. Bournmouth. Area 1,500 ac. Pop. 314.

a separate system of society.—WESTMERE, the only inhabited island, is 15 m. from the coast; has a harbour, and a church 2,000 feet above the sea.

WESTMERE, an inland co. of Ireland, Leitrim, surrounded by coo. Longford, Meath, King's co., and Roscommon. Area 706 sq. m. or 453,468 ac., of which 365,218 are arable, 8,808 in plantations, and 84,897 uncultivated. Pop. 111,400. Surface undulating, diversified with woods, lakes, and bogs, comprising, however, much fertile soil and agreeable scenery. On the W. it is bounded by Lough Ree and the Shannon; the Inny flows through its N. part and the Brosna through its centre, and connected with these rivers are lakes Deroveragh, Ennel, Owhel, Lane, Iron, Sheelin, etc. Grazing and dairy-farming are the chief occupations, and cattle and sheep are of superior breeds; but agriculture is increasing. Principal crops, oats and potatoes, with some wheat; flour and meal are made in large quantities. The Royal Canal intersects the co., and a branch of the Grand Canal proceeds to Kibbeggan. In 1852, the 105 national schools were attended by 10,037 pupils. Westmeath is subdivided into 12 baronies and 63 parishes, chiefly in the diocese of Meath. Principal towns, Mullingar the cap., Moate, and a part of Athlone. Excluding its boro., it sends 2 members to House of Commons. Registered electors (1849) 645.

WESTMINSTER, a pa. of England, co. Sussex, 5½ m. N.W. Lewes. Area 2,000 ac. Pop. 617.

WESTMILL, a pa. of England, co. Hertford, 1½ m. S.E. E. Bentlingford. Area 2,130 ac. Pop. 380.

WESTMINSTER (CITY AND LIBERTY OF), England, co. Middlesex, is the W. part of London, having S. and W. the par. Chelsea and Kensington; N. the bor. Marylebone, from which it is separated by Oxford Street; E. the Strand and the river Thames, separating it from the bor. Lambeth (with which it communicates by Vauxhall, Westminster, Hungerford, and Waterloo Bridges). Area 2,500 ac. Pop. 241,611. Its different parts present a great contrast. In the vicinity of its abbey is one of the worst parts of the metropolis, but in the other parts of Westminster are the finest quarters of the capital; the principal government offices and the greater number of the town residences of the nobility. Principal structures, Westminster Abbey and Hall, the new houses of parliament, privy council office, treasury, and board of trade, in Whitehall; St James's, Buckingham, and Kensington palaces; Somerset house, with King's college; Westminster, St George's, and Charing-cross hospitals. WINCHESTER, Venta Belgarum, a city, parl. and mmic. bor. of England, of which it was long the cap., now cap. co. Hants, nearly in its centre, on rt. b. of the Itchen, across which it communicates with a suburb by a bridge, on the South Western Railway, 69 m. W.S.W. London. Area of city and soke-liberty 2,250 ac. Pop. 10,739; do. of bor., which includes St Cross, Wimal, etc., 13,704. The ancient city was enclosed by walls, of which the site only is now traceable. The modern city consists chiefly of a main street, crossed at right angles by many others. Nearly all its S.E. quarter is occupied by the cathedral and its precincts, supposed to have been founded in the 2d century. It is 545 feet in length externally, 298 feet in breadth at the transept, with a nave 361 feet, a choir 136 feet in length, and a central tower, 160 feet in height. Except its W. front, its exterior is heavy, but its interior is magnificent. It contains the tomb of William Rufus; and, in a series of carved chests over the choir, the remains of many of the kings of Wessex, and of the Saxon kings of England. Its altar-piece is the celebrated "Raising of Lazarus," by West. The see of Winchester comprises the co. Hants, the greater part of Surrey, and the Channel Islands, including 384 pas. At one period Winchester is said to have had 80 churches, chapels, and monastic institutions, many of which were swept away at the Reformation; at present it has 9 parish churches, of which those of St Lawrence, the Mother-church, into which the bishop makes solemn entry on taking the see; St Martin, St Michael, and St Swithun, over a postern gate, are most worthy of notice. Winchester College, founded in 1047, has five buildings. Other principal structures are St John's house, barracks for 1,000 men, and the same hall, on the site of an ancient castle; the gold-hall, co. gaol, co. house of correction, co. hospital, a Roman Catholic, and other dissenting chapels; a nursery, removed hither from Brussels; market-house, theatre and assembly rooms. Of 4 ancient gates, only the W. remains. In an apartment over it, are preserved the original Winchester bushel of king Edgar, and other Anglo-Saxon standards of measure. Near it is an obelisk to commemorate a destructive visitation of the plague in 1603, and a public cemetery was laid out here in 1840. The hospital of St Cross, 1 m. S. the city, but now included within the bor., founded in the reign of Stephen, has still a kind of monastic body of brethren, and affords entertainment to the poor and travellers. It has a very remarkable anc. church, and other buildings. Winchester has many almshouses and other charities; also a mechanics' institute, public library, and savings' bank. It is governed by a mayor, 6 aldermen, and 18 councillors, is the seat of the co. assizes, and has quarter and petty sessions, a recorder's court, and a chancery court of the bishop. It sends 2 members to House of Commons, and is the place of election of members for the co. WOOLWICH, a pa., town, and naval port of England, co. Kent, 9 m. S.E.E. London, with which it is connected by railway. Area of pa. 640 ac. Pop. 33,367, chiefly dependent on the government establishments. The town, about 1 m. in length, is on an elevated site, separated from the Thames by the dock-yard; it has an old church, a new church, and several chapels; a Scotch church, dissenters' meeting-houses, numerous schools, and a theatre. The dock-yard, the most ancient in the kingdom, has some fine new docks. Here were built several first-rate ships; but from the comparative shallowness of water in the river, such ships are mostly built at the other naval ports, and this yard is chiefly employed for constructing steamers. Woolwich has the largest arsenal in Britain, covering more than 100 acres, and containing nearly 24,000 pieces of ordnance, besides other warlike materials for the army and navy, a royal laboratory, &c. It is the head-quarters of the royal horse and foot artillery, and royal sappers and miners, for whom, and other corps, here are extensive barracks; and on a fine parade ground, S. the town, are a repository for military models, and an observatory. It is the seat of a royal military academy for engineering and artillery. Woolwich joins with Deptford and Greenwich in returning 2 members to House of Commons. Monthly petty sessions are held here.

the Severn, here crossed by a bridge, 3½ m. N.W. the Spetchley station of the Birmingham and Bristol Railway, 25 m. S.W. Birmingham. Area of city and bor., comprising 11 entire parishes, and other subdivisions, 355 ac. Pop. 27,528. The city, which is well built, was formerly enclosed by a wall, some vestiges of which remain; and the college precincts were, in early Saxon times, surrounded by separate fortifications. The cathedral was founded in 680, but the present edifice, with its appendages, dating from the 14th century, is a plain Gothic building, with a central tower 200 feet in height. Adjoining it are the clouters, with residences of the cathedral dignitaries, the chapter house, with a valuable library, a large ancient hall, now occupied by the King's school, and the bishop's palace. The see of Worcester comprises the cos. Worcester and Warwick, with portions of adjacent cos. in all embracing 362 par. The churches of St Andrew's,

St Clement, and St Nicholas, are handsome buildings, and there are chapels for Roman Catholics, Independents, Calvinists, Baptists, Wesleyans, Huntingdon, & Friends' meeting-houses. Other principal public buildings are the Guildhall, county courts, county and city gaols, market-house, house of industry, county infirmary, buildings of various schools and charity institutions, public subscription library, and theatre. The royal grammar school, founded by Henry VIII, affords the privilege of competition for 2 exhibitions at Balliol college, Oxford. The Free grammar school, founded by Queen Elizabeth, has 14 exhibitions of 50% to the universities and scholarships at Worcester college, and Magdalen hall, Oxford. Here are national, Lancastrian, and several other endowed schools. Total revenue of charities 4,381¹/₂ annually. There are also a female penitentiary, lying-in, ophthalmic, and other medical institutions, a dispensary, humane and other societies; and Worcester is the headquarters of the Provincial Medical Association of Great Britain, and with Gloucester and Hereford, the place of a triennial musical festival, the proceeds of which are applied to the relief of widows and orphans of the clergy. Principal manufactures are china wares, gloves, lace, spirits, leather, nails, and tanned wares. There are extensive iron works on the canal and river banks; and the city is the centre of a large trade in corn and hops. Good warehouses and quays border the Severn, which is here navigable for large barges, and Worcester is the entrepôt for a large and populous district. It has several banks. The borough is divided into 6 wards, and governed by a mayor, 11 aldermen, and 30 councillors. It sends two members to House of Commons. It is the place of election of members for the county. Under the name of Caer Guorangan it was one of the principal cities of the ancient Britons, and in the early Saxon period became the second bishopric in Mercia. The troops of Cromwell here obtained a decisive victory over those of Charles I., Sept. 3, 1651. Lord Somers was born at Worcester in 1652.

WORCESTERSHIRE, an inland co. of England, with a very irregular outline, and many detached portions, but mostly bounded by the cos. Warwick on the E., Gloucester on the S., Hereford on the W., and Salop and Stafford on the N. Area 763 sq. m., or 463,720 ac., of which about 400,000 are estimated to be arable, or in meadows and pastures. Pop. 276,926. It is fertile, well watered, and richly wooded. Principal rivers, the Severn and its affluents the Avon and Teme, all having a S. course. The Malvern Hills in the S.W. separate it from Herefordshire. The Brecon hills in the S.E. rise to 900 feet above the sea. Wheat is extensively raised; hops are an important crop; orchards are numerous, and large quantities of cider and perry are made. Cattle and sheep are fattened here. Coal is found at Dudley; in a N. detached district at Droitwich are brine springs; building stone and clay are other chief minerals. Carpets are made at Kidderminster, glass and iron wares at Dudley and Stourbridge; gloves and porcelain at Worcester; needles and fish-hooks at Redditch and Feckenham. County rev. (1842) 23,363. Numerous canals, and the Birmingham and Gloucester Railway, intersect the county. After Worcester, the cap., the principal towns are the boro. Evesham, Droitwich, Kidderminster, Bewdley, and Dudley. The co. with bor. sends 8 members to House of Commons. Registered co. electors (1843) for east division 6,724, for west division 4,850.

WÜRTEMBERG (KINGDOM OF), a state of S.W. Germany, between lat. 47° 35' and 49° 35' 30" N., lon. 8° 15' and 10° 30' E.; bounded E. by Bavaria, S. by the Lake of Constance, S.W., W., and N. by Baden; cap. Stuttgart. Length 140 m., breadth 20 to 100 m. It is divided into the circles Neckar, Black Forest, Danube, and Jazt. Area 7,658 sq. m. Pop. (1855) 1,869,720. The territory belongs to the basins of the Rhine and Danube. Its surface is mountainous except in the S. The principal chain is that of the Alps of Swabia, which unites on the S.W. with the Schwarzwald and separates the basins of the Neckar and Danube. The highest points are not more than 3,600 feet. The principal rivers are the Danube and Neckar, the latter of which drains the greater part of the kingdom. A portion of the Lake of Constance belongs to Württemberg, and there are many small lakes in the S., the chief of which is the Feder-see. Climate in general temperate and healthy, but variable. Temperature ranges from 77° to 58° in summer, and 5° to 16° Fahr. in winter. The soil is extremely fertile in the valleys of the Neckar, the Neckar and its affluents, and on the Lake of Constance; the usual grains are raised more than necessary for home consumption. Agriculture has made rapid progress, and there is an agricultural institute at Hohenheim. The potato, introduced in 1710, is now the principal sustenance of one-fourth of the population. The cultivation of the vine is limited to the valley of the Neckar and the Tauber, and to the shores of the Lake of Constance. The Neckar wines are the best; some of the others resemble Rhenish wines. The principal fruits are apples, pears, prunes, and cherries, and fruit-trees are cultivated over all the territory; beetroot is grown for the manufacture of sugar; hemp, lint, tobacco, and hops are raised in small quantities. The Alp and the Schwarzwald are covered with vast forests, which yield valuable timber. The rearing of horses, cattle, and sheep, is an important branch of industry; these are in general of good breeds. The principal mineral products are iron and coal, which are abundant. Silver, copper, cobalt, and lead are found in small quantities; and there are quarries of building stones and marble. Württemberg has many mineral springs; the best frequented baths are those of Wildbad, the only thermal springs in the territory. Salt is an important product, and turf is very abundant. Manufactures are unimportant; they comprise linen, woollens, silks, carpets, hosiery, leather, porcelain, iron and steel goods, and tobacco; breweries and distilleries are numerous. The transit trade is considerable, chiefly by the navigation of the Neckar. A line of railway has been opened from Stuttgart N. to Heilbronn, and another S.E. to Geislingen; and thence S. by Ulm, Biberach, and Ravensburg, to Friedrichshafen, on the Lake of Constance. Württemberg has long been favourably distinguished for the number and excellence of its educational establishments. Each commune and even hamlet has its primary school, attendance at which is obligatory on children between the ages of 6 and 14, and the number at school is in the proportion of 1 in 6 of the population. The university of Tübingen is celebrated; there are infant schools in the cap. and several of the larger towns, and an institution for young ladies, normal schools, polytechnic and military schools. Württemberg is a constitutional representative kingdom, governed according to the constitution of 1819, with a diet of 2 chambers. The pop. is almost exclusively German, except a few Jews and some colonies of French Protestants; the majority belong to the evangelical church, formed by the union of the Lutherans and reformers in 1833, and only about one-third are Roman Catholics. All sects are tolerated. The army consists of 19,170 men in time of war, and 8,107 in time of peace; every male subject is liable to serve from the age of 25 to 31. YESSO, JESSE or MATSAMAI, one of the largest of the Japanese islands, lat. 41° 24' N., lon. 140° 9' E.; separated on the S. from Niphon by the Strait of Sangar, and N. from the Island Saghalien by La Perouse Channel. Estimated area 62,600 sq. m. A rugged mountain-chain traverses it from N. to S., and it contains active and extinct volcanoes, is well watered, and has coasts indented by numerous bays and harbours, the best of which are Volcano Bay and Edermo. Its N. part is very fertile. Products comprise wheat, rice, hemp, tobacco, fruits, oak, elm, and birch timber, and large quantities of dried salmon and other fish, which are mostly exchanged with the Japanese for summer clothing. Here are said to be some valuable mines of gold and silver. Yesso is not considered an integral part of Japan, but a dependency of which the Japanese took possession in consequence of the extension of the Russian dominion into the Kurile archipelago. Its inhabitants preserve their own religion, laws, customs, and public offices, though the election of the last has to be confirmed in Japan. Principal city Matsamai, near the S. coast.—The Strait of Yesso between this island and Kuzashiri, is 12 miles across.

YORK, Eboracum, the second city of England, in point of rank, though not in size or commercial importance, a parl. and munici. bor., and co. of itself, cap. co. Yorkshire, near the centre of which it stands, at the junction of the three Riding, and almost, on the Ouse, at the influx of the Foss, and at the meeting of railways from Berwick, London, and the central cos., 22 m. N.E. Leeds. Area of city 2,720 ac. Pop. 36,303. The parl. bor. comprises in whole or part 36 pas. and some extra-parochial dists., and is nearly coincident with the munic. bor. Pop. of bor. 40,550.

The city is enclosed by ancient walls, flanked with towers, and is entered by five principal and five minor gateways, some of which former are remarkable structures. The Ouse and Foss traverse the interior of the city; the Foss is crossed by four bridges, and the Ouse by one bridge. Except the castle, occupying nearly 4 acres, between the Ouse and Foss, and containing the county-hall and gaol, most of the public edifices of interest are in the N. of the city. At the head of these is York minster or cathedral, the finest structure of its kind in England, mostly built in the 13th and 14th centuries, 634½ feet in length, and 222 feet in breadth internally, with a great tower 334 feet in height, magnificent W. front flanked by 2 towers 196 feet in height, and richly adorned within. It was set on fire by the fanatic Martin in 1539, and suffered from an accidental fire in 1840, but the injuries have been fully repaired.

The sec of York comprises the East and West Ridings of the co. and the archdeaconry of Cleveland; the authority of the archbishop extends over the province of York, consisting, with the archbishops, of the bishoprics of Durham, Carlisle, Chester, Elton, and Bodor and Man. Revenue of see 10,000. Many of the churches are handsome; St Michael-le-Belfry and St Martin's are built in the late perpendicular style; All-Saints, St Mary's, Canongate, St Denis, St Lawrence, St Margaret, and St Mary Bishop-hill the latter, are all fine structures. The chapter-house, the mansion-house, with an Ionic colonnade and a state-room; the guild-hall, a Gothic structure; the assembly-room, concert-hall, theatre, buildings of the Yorkshire philosophical society, museum, subscription library, city gaol, Roman Catholic and several other dissenting chapels, and the chief railway station, deserve especial notice amongst the numerous public buildings. Outside of the city are the co. hospital, a lunatic asylum, independent of the Retreat, another and famous institution for the insane, about 1 m. distant, managed by the Society of Friends; the cavalry barracks, and Bishopthorpe palace, the residence of the archbishop. A fine planted walk extends along the Ouse, and near it are excellent baths. York has several Roman antiquities. Charities are very numerous, and have an aggregate revenue of £622. It is governed by a lord mayor, and had, until the municipal Reform Act, a corporation, who sat, as in London, in two separate chambers. It is now divided into 6 wards, and has 12 aldermen and 36 councillors. Corp. revenue (1847-8) 7,404. Courts of assize for the city and co. are held in it twice annually, and it has quarter sessions, a court of pleas, and petty sessions, twice weekly. There are several commercial corporations in the city; glass and iron wares, carpets, white and red lead, linens, woollens, paper hangings, and many articles of luxury are manufactured. York has an active trade in the import of coal, but its chief prosperity is due to its being resorted to by the gentry of N. England, as a kind of northern metropolis. It has two important banking companies, and it communicates by the Great North of England Railway with Darlington, Durham, and Newcastle, by the York and North Midland Railway with Sheffield and Derby; and by other railways with Whitby, Hull, Scarborough, &c. Large sales of cattle and horses take place at fortnightly fairs; other fairs are held during the year. It sends 2 members to House of Commons. York was the residence of Hadrian, Severus, Constantine Chlorus, Constantine, and other Roman emperors, and the funeral obsequies of Severus, who died there in 212, are supposed to have been performed on Sivers-hill W. the city. Under the Saxons it was successively the cap. of the kingdoms Northumberland and Deira. It suffered greatly for opposing William the Conqueror. In the civil war it aided actively with the king, but it was equally noted for its opposition to the arbitrary decrees of James II.—Ainsty of York. [YORKSHIRE.]

YORK, several cos. of the U. S., North America.—I. Maine, in its S.W. part, cap. Alfred. Area 818 sq. m. Pop. 60,101.—II. Pennsylvania, bordered N.E. by the Susquehanna. Area 831 square miles. YORKSHIRE, the largest co. of England, in its N. part, between lat. 53° 18' and 54° 40' N., lon. 0° 10' E., and 3° 37' W., having E. the North Sea, and landward the cos. Durham, Westmoreland, Lancashire, Cheshire, Derby, Notts, and Lincoln, from which last it is mostly separated by the estuary of the Humber. Area 5,896 sq. m., or 3,829,288 acres, of which about 2,500,000 are estimated to be productive. Pop. 1,797,995. Surface very much diversified; in the N.W. are some of the highest mountains in England; elsewhere barren moors are alternated with some of the richest tracts in the kingdom. In the W. are limestone and coal succeeded towards the E. by lias, oolite, and chalk. Rivers, including the Don, Wharfe, Aire, Ure, Swale, Derwent, and Hull, are all tributaries of the Ouse and Humber, except the Tees, forming the N. boundary, and the Ribble in the extreme W. Principal capes, Flamborough-head and Spurn-head. Yorkshire is both an agricultural and grazing, and a manufacturing county of the first rank. Large numbers of horses are bred; and the co. supplies many of the cows used in the London dairies. Sheep have been estimated at 1,300,000, and the annual produce of wool at 2,800 packs. Swine are numerous, and York is famous for its hams. Properties more subdivided in the N. and W. than in the E. Farms generally small. The W. division of the co. is the chief seat of mining and manufacturing industry, and has woollen, cotton, flax, and silk mills. The co. is divided into North, East, and West Ridings (a name said to be derived from a Saxon word signifying thirds), each of which sends 3 members to H. of C.; and into the ainsty of the city of York. It is subdivided into 17 wapentakes and 2 liberties, and into 613 parishes. It contains one arch-episcopal city, in the see of which, and that of Ripon, it is mostly comprised; and it has 17 part. bors. and 59 market towns. It sends, with its bors. 39 mems. to H. of C. Reg. elects. of its 3 Ridings (1848) 55,538. The East Riding; area 1,111 sq. m. or 708,418 ac.; pop. 220,983; comprises the hilly district termed the wolds, and moor moorland; but greater agricultural improvement has been lately made there than in any other part of the co. It is entered by the Humber and Hull Rivers, and is traversed along its S. extremity by the Hull and Selby Railway. It contains the towns Hull, Beverly, Great Driffield, Market-Weighton, Pocklington, and Bridlington. Reg. parl. electors (1848) 7,577. — The North Riding; area 2,055 sq. m. or 1,350,121 ac.; pop. 215,214; is chiefly famous as a grazing country. It contains the rich agricultural districts Cleveland and Ryedale, and has mines of alum and lead, with freestone and marble quarries. Principal rivers, the Ure, Swale, and Tees; and it is traversed by the Great North of England Railway, and the lines from York to Whitby and Scarborough. Within it are the towns North-Allerton (which may be considered its cap.), Boroughbridge, Richmond, Thirsk, Stokesley, Kirkby-Moorehead, Pickering, Scarborough, and Whitby. Reg. electors (1848) 11,597. — The West Riding comprises all the S. and W. parts of Yorkshire, and borders on six other cos. Area, excluding slacks, 2,576 sq. m. Pop. 1,325,495. Surface very irregular, and it contains some of the best land and most picturesque scenery in England. Principal rivers, the Wharfe, Calder, Aire, Don, and Ribbles; and it is intersected by numerous canals and by railways between all of its large towns. About 12,000 acres of common land have been enclosed and rendered arable. Principal crop wheat. Timber is plentiful, and a large part of the surface is in pasture; though less attention has been paid to cattle-breeding than in the other Ridings. The valuable coal-beds around Leeds, Sheffield, Bradford, and Wakefield, have been a main source of the prosperity of those towns; iron, stone, and lead, at Grassington and Pateley Bridge, are also abundant. In manufacturing industry, this Riding has importance equal to that of S. Lancashire. Leeds, Bradford, Huddersfield, Halifax, Wakefield, and Dewsbury, are the great seats of the English woollen manufacture; flax-spinning is extensively carried on at Leeds; Sheffield has manufactures of the best cutlery and hardware, and Rotherham possesses large ironworks. Cotton manufactures have been established at Easingwold. Besides the above named towns, Pontefract, Barnsley, Doncaster, Bawtry, Thorne, Goole, Selby, Wetherby, Otley, Knaresborough, Ripley, Ryeon, and Skipton, are in this Riding. Registered parl. electors (1848) 24,034.

"This interesting and instructive little volume is worthy of the attention of all students. It contains a concise paraphrase of the Acts of the Apostles, occasionally introducing the words of the narrative itself, with suggestions for more correct translations of the original in certain places, together with much valuable information to illustrate the history. We heartily recommend this work to those who are engaged in the instruction of the young. The Sunday School Teacher may derive many useful hints from it. And those who are preparing for any examination at which a knowledge of the Acts of the Apostles is required, will find its valuable summary of important matter connected with the sacred narrative. Even the well-instructed clergyman may find his memory pleasantly refreshed by the allusions to many facts, and derive suggestions for rendering any lectures upon the Acts both interesting and useful to his people." "High and pure aims, earnestness of purpose, and sobriety of judgment, are the qualities which give weight and value to this writer's intellectual endowments, which alone for considerable deficiencies, and which constitute her a peculiarly safe and trustworthy guide for young minds. The characteristics of the mind before us are practical religious self-discipline, rigid self-training, carefully cultivated habits of thought and observation, and habitual self-control. No writer gives more the conviction of writing from experience, the reader, judging from the work alone, is persuaded of this; it gives them then power; we instinctively know that the practical teaching in them has been worked out, and found to be true."

"Naturalists will be glad to learn that Professor Clark has completed his translation of Van Der Hoeven's Handbook of Zoology by the publication of the second volume, occupying the Vertebrate Animals. The arrangement is the same as that which we described in the former volume. The four classes of Fishes, Reptiles, Birds, and Mammals are introduced by short general prefaces, which are followed by a brief scientific description of the families and genera, and the principal species. A series of beautifully executed plates at the end carries the eye along the ascending scale of life by the depiction of some of its chief organs. Professor Clark has supplied a great want by thus placing a complete and careful manual, bearing the warrant of the highest names and the latest science, within the reach of the private student." GUARDIAN.
